PREFACE.

1. The versions now for the first time printed in an entire form[a], may be regarded as the earliest in the English language, which embrace any considerable portion of the Holy Scriptures. Though never used in the public service of the Church, they must have been widely circulated as well among the clergy as the laity, from the period of their completion in the latter part of the fourteenth century, until their place was occupied by the editions of the reign of Henry the Eighth[b]. The influence which they exercised upon the religious opinions and sentiments of the nation at large was, without question, extensive. In the interval between the years 1382 and 1526 they diffused a great amount of scriptural truth; supplied to the opponents of the papal system the most effectual means of exposing its abuses and errors; and thus laid a deep foundation for the reforms of the sixteenth century. The effect of these versions and the merit due to their authors will be better estimated, after a brief review of what had previously been done towards a translation of the Scriptures into the vernacular tongue.

These versions the earliest in English.

2. To commence with the Anglo-Saxon period. The poem which bears the name of Cædmon, gives several passages of Scripture with tolerable fidelity, and it might require extended notice, if the epic and legendary character of the composition suffered it to be ranked among the versions of holy writ[c]. Aldhelm, bishop of Sherborn, who died in 709, is reported to have rendered the Psalter into his native language[d], and the Anglo-Saxon version, discovered in the Royal Library at Paris about the beginning of the present century, has been supposed to be at least in part his production. The first fifty psalms are in prose, the others in verse[e].

Anglo-Saxon versions of scripture. Poem of Cædmon. Aldhelm; version of the Psalms by him.

3. Bede wrote chiefly for the learned; yet that the common people might more easily be taught the elements of their religion, he turned the Apostles' creed and the Lord's prayer into Anglo-Saxon, and frequently presented copies of these formularies to such illiterate priests as came under his notice[f]. He died in 735, and one of his Bede; translated gospel of John.

[a] When the present edition was commenced, no part of the earlier of these two versions had ever been printed, with the exception of the Song of Solomon, given by Dr. Adam Clarke in his commentary on the Bible (8 vols. 4°. Lond. 1810–25), from a Ms. in his own library, (now Brit. Mus. Eg. 618, 619.) In 1848 the New Testament in the earlier version was printed by Mr. Lea Wilson from a Ms. in his own possession, (now in the hands of the earl of Ashburnham,) under the title The New Testament in English, translated by John Wycliffe, circa MCCCLXXX. etc. 4°. Lond. The New Testament in the later version was first published by the rev. John Lewis, minister of Margate, fol. Lond. 1731, the text being taken from two Mss., one belonging to himself, (now Bodl. Gough Eccl. top. 5.) the other to sir Edw. Dering, bart. (now in the possession of the very rev. W. Conybeare, dean of Llandaff). Mr. Lewis's edition was reprinted by the rev. H. H. Baber, 4°. Lond. 1810. The New Testament in the same version was again published in 1841, from a Ms. then belonging to H. R. H. the duke of Sussex, (now in the collection of the earl of Ashburnham,) by Messrs. Bagster, in The English Hexapla, 4°. Lond.

[b] The first printed edition of the New Testament in English, was that by Tindal in 1526; the first of the whole Bible, that by Coverdale in 1535.

[c] Cædmon was a monk of Whitby, in the seventh century. The poem as it now exists has, probably, been materially altered by the reciters and transcribers of a later period. It has been twice published, first by Francis Junius in 1655, and next by Mr. Benjamin Thorpe in 1832.

last efforts was a translation of the gospel of St. John, which he seems to have completed, just as death put an end to his labours [g].

King Alfred, anxious for the translation of Scripture.

4. Alfred, in his zeal for the improvement of his country, did not overlook the importance of vernacular Scripture. At the head of his laws he set in Anglo-Saxon the ten commandments, with such of the Mosaic injunctions in the three following chapters of Exodus, as were most to his purpose. What other parts of the Bible he translated, it is difficult to determine. A remarkable passage in his preface to the Pastoral of Pope Gregory [h], leaves no room for doubt, that if the more necessary portions of holy writ were not made accessible to his subjects in their own tongue, it was only because this wise and pious prince failed of the opportunity to accomplish his wishes.

Anglo-Saxon version of the four Gospels.

5. Whatever might be the extent of Alfred's biblical labours, it is beyond question that soon after his days the Anglo-Saxon church had her own interpretations of those parts of Scripture which were in most frequent use. The Psalter ascribed to Aldhelm, if it be not the work of that prelate, certainly cannot be later than the ninth century. To the same period may be safely attributed the Anglo-Saxon translation of the Gospels [i]. Several Mss. of it are preserved; but none of them appear to give the version in its original purity. Successive transcribers adapted the language to the idioms and inflexions of their own times and provinces. Some however of the copies are earlier and less degenerate than others. The latest seem to be considerably subsequent to the conquest, the most ancient may have been written more than a hundred years before it [k].

Anglo-Saxon glosses on the Gospels.

6. But it was not solely to this version that the unlettered Anglo-Saxon was indebted for a knowledge of what the Evangelists record. Access was also afforded to their narratives by means of verbal glosses made in copies of the Latin Gospels. These glosses were written between the lines of the text, rendering it in the same order word by word. Of the two glosses which are now exstant, one is found in the famous book of Durham [l], and was made by the priest Aldred, probably in the tenth century; the other of the same age is contained in a Ms. of the Bodleian Library [m], and had for its authors Owun and Farmen, the latter a priest at Harewood.

Anglo-Saxon glosses on the Psalter.

7. Similar glosses had been made on the Psalter. A gloss of this kind, probably of the ninth century, was published in 1640 from a Ms. [n] belonging to sir Henry Spelman, by his son, afterwards sir John [o]. Another gloss of the same period was published by the Surtees Society in 1843 [p]. Variations from these glosses are found in several other Mss. [q] Glosses also occur on the canticles of the church, and the Lord's prayer; on portions of Scripture in the ritual of Durham [r], and on the more difficult words of the book of Proverbs [s].

Ælfric's Heptateuch, etc.

8. Towards the close of the tenth century Ælfric translated, omitting some parts and greatly abridging others, the Pentateuch, Joshua, Judges, a portion of the books of Kings, Esther, Job, Judith, and the Maccabees[t]. He also drew up in Anglo-Saxon a brief account of the books of the Old and New Testament[u]; and lastly, by the texts and quotations used in his numerous homilies, he added greatly to the knowledge of the sacred volume[v].

Much of Anglo-Saxon literature lost.

9. The writings which are still exstant shew that the Anglo-Saxon church must have had in her own tongue a considerable amount of scriptural instruction. But these cannot be the full measure of what our forefathers possessed. Much, it cannot be doubted, perished in the troubles and confusion attending the incursions and pillages of the Danes; and much, subsequently, through the disfavour shewn by the Normans to the Anglo-Saxon language and literature[w].

Anglo-Norman versions of Scripture.

10. Before the year 1200 the Anglo-Normans had translated into their own dialect, in prose, the Psalter and canticles of the church[x]; and towards the middle of the following century appear to have possessed not only a history of the Old Testament in verse, as far as the end of the books of Kings, but also a prose version of the entire Bible[y]. The knowledge of Scripture communicated to the higher classes of society in England by means of these productions, contributed, by satisfying the demand of those who were the more powerful, to delay any attempt to put the sacred volume within the reach of the great mass of the people. Nevertheless, the Anglo-Saxon versions and glosses of the Gospels, and other portions of Scripture, remained partially in use, as is proved by the copies still exstant, transcribed in the eleventh and twelfth centuries[z].

English translations in verse. Ormulum.

11. The earliest essays of biblical translation assumed in English, as in most other languages, a poetical form. The Ormulum[a], written perhaps about the commencement of the thirteenth century, is a paraphrase in verse of the narrative of the Gospels and Acts of the Apostles. Highly valuable as it is in a philological point of view, yet, never proceeding probably beyond the original copy of the author, it could have been of little or no use in religious teaching. To a later period of the same century belongs a poem reciting the principal events comprised in the books of Genesis and Exodus[b]. Abstract of Genesis etc. Before the conclusion of the century, however, an important step had been taken in scriptural interpretation by turning into verse the whole of the Psalter[c]. Psalter. The translation is a tolerably close rendering of the Latin, and has the additional merit of being simple and expressive[d].

[t] What remains of this translation was printed in 1698 by Edw. Thwaites, from the Bodl. Ms. Laud E. 19, under the title Heptateuchus, liber Job et Evangelium Nicodemi, Anglo-Saxonice. Historiæ Judith fragmentum, Dano-Saxonice. 4°. Oxon. 1698. Another Ms. occurs in the Cotton collection Nero B. 4.

[u] Edited by Will. L'Isle, with the title, A Saxon Treatise concerning the Old and New Testament. 4°. Lond. 1623.

[v] His homilies, eighty in number, have been edited for the Ælfric Society, by Mr. Benj. Thorpe, 2 vols. 8°. 1843–1846.

[y] See P. Paris, Manuscrits François de la Bibl. du Roi, tom. i. p. 1. tom. vii. pp. 183, 200. A Ms. of the first vol. of this prose translation of the Bible, executed in England about the year 1260, was recently in the possession of Edw. Ayshford Sanford, esq. of Nynehead Somersetshire.

[a] It is found in the Bodl. Ms. Junius 1.

[b] A single copy is preserved among Abp. Parker's Mss. in Corp. Ch. Coll. Cambr. R. 11. (Nasmith 444.)

[c] Six copies remain, which occasionally differ much from each other. The translation was edited for the Surtees Society by the rev. J. Stevenson, from the Cotton Ms. Vespasian D. 7, in Anglo-Saxon and early English Psalter, 8°. Lond. 1843; the other Mss. are, 1. Brit. Mus. Egerton 614; 2. Brit. Mus. Harl. 1770; 3. Corp. Ch. Coll. Cambr. O. 6. (Nasmith 278); 4. Bodl. 3027; and 5. Bodl. 2325.

[d] During the reign of the first three Edwards there appeared a great variety of poetical compositions upon sacred subjects, containing large extracts from Scripture. Some of these were taken from Anglo-Norman and French originals. The principal were in the form of legends of saints, and for the fasts and festivals of Prose versions of Psalter: 1. by Schorham.

12. The earliest version in English prose of any entire book of Scripture appears to have been made about the time when Edward the Third ascended the throne, by William de Schorham, vicar of Chart-Sutton near Leeds in Kent[e]. It is found in a Ms.[f] recently acquired for the National collection, containing the Psalter in Latin and English, verse by verse. The translation is generally faithful and literal, except that the words of the gloss are frequently substituted for those of the text[g]. To the Psalms are added the usual canticles, including the Te Deum and Athanasian creed[h].

2. Version with commentary, by Rolle.

13. Schorham's version of the Psalter could scarcely have been completed, when another was undertaken. This was the work of Richard Rolle, chantry priest at Hampole near Doncaster, who died in 1349. Having written a Latin commentary on the Psalms[i], he was afterwards induced to translate the text, and to publish it with a commentary in English. Of this work numerous copies are exstant[k]; but they differ remarkably from each other, and shew that the original must have been altered to a very great extent. The preface, a few verbal variations excepted, is the same in all. In the text there is also a general agreement, though the language is, in the later copies, rendered conformable to the southern and more polished dialect, and frequent changes in single words and expressions have been from time to time introduced[l].

the church; paraphrases of the Gospel lessons; narratives of the passion and resurrection of our Lord; relations of the creation and fall of man; expositions of the Pater Noster, the Creeds, the Ten Commandments, and the Ave-Maria; and exhortations to confession and penitence.

[e] Schorham was admitted to the vicarage of Chart-Sutton in 1320. That he was the author of this version is inferred from the following facts. The Ms. is of the earlier half of the fourteenth century; it is in one hand throughout: two poetical pieces which occur towards the end of the volume are expressly attributed to Schorham; and in the rubrics of these pieces, as well as in other parts of the book, the welfare of his soul is commended to the prayers of the devout reader.

[g] For instance, the last clause of Ps. i. 1. is given thus, "ne sat nauȝt in fals iugement," the translator rejecting cathedra pestilentiæ, and adopting the interlinear gloss, judicio falsitatis.

[h] As a specimen of this translation, a psalm is here subjoined:

Ps. xxii. Addl. Ms. 17. 376.

Our Lord gouerneth me, and nothyng shal defailen to me; in the stede of pasture he sett me ther.

He norissed me vp water of fyllynge; he turned my soule fram the fende.

In the commentary however the case is far otherwise. Here some copies so differ from others, that it is only in the first twenty or thirty psalms that any correspondence is found beyond an occasional trace of a common original. In the Mss. of the earlier text the commentary is brief; in those of the latter it extends to three or four times the bulk, and in respect to the greater part of the work may be regarded as an entirely new exposition. To a Ms. in the Bodleian Library[m], containing the shorter comment, some verses are prefixed, which give several curious particulars of its history. The verses as well as the Ms. appear to be of the time of Henry the Sixth[n]. The writer states in them, that the work was undertaken at the request of dame Margaret Kirkby, a recluse, probably at Hampole; that the autograph copy of the author was still remaining at the nunnery, attached by chains to his tomb; that the writer's own Ms. was a faithful transcript from the original; and that many copies in ordinary use had been corrupted by the Lollards. Upon examination, however, the enlarged commentary appears to contain no controversial matter, nor any sentiments indicative of the Lollard party. Indeed, a few passages of the shorter exposition, which reflect upon the luxury and worldliness of the higher clergy, are altogether omitted or greatly softened down. The character of these and like passages led Humphrey Wanley to ascribe the more compendious comment to Wycliffe himself in his younger days[o]. If Wanley's notion be received, it will be necessary to suppose that the larger commentary was composed by Wycliffe in later life, or what is perhaps not less probable, by one of the more moderate of his followers. One cannot, however, refuse to credit the main facts averred in the verses just quoted from the Bodl. Ms., and it seems therefore more likely, that the copy to which Wanley particularly referred, agreeing as it does with this Ms. except in a few unimportant variations, represents substantially the original of Rolle[p].

3. Version ascribed to John Hyde.

14. A translation of the Psalms is preserved in the library of Trinity college Dublin, in a volume[q] which contains likewise Wycliffe's commentary on the Apocalypse. The Ms. is of the fourteenth century; and a note at the end of the Psalter, in the hand of the original scribe, gives the name of John Hyde as the owner of the book[r]; it has thence been inferred, that he was also the author of the version[s]. From a few passages which the editors have had the opportunity of examining, they are inclined to believe that the Psalter of this Ms. will be found to be a revision of the version of Schorham rather than an independent translation[t].

[n] The following are a portion of these verses:

[p] An accurate examination of the various copies of this work, and of other writings ascribed to Rolle, might possibly throw further light upon the history both of the translation and of the commentary.

[t] An opinion may be formed as to the extent of the agreement from the subjoined verses:

Version of the whole Bible; to be mainly ascribed to Wycliffe.

15. Down to the year 1360, the Psalter appears to be the only book of Scripture which had been entirely rendered into English. Within less than twenty-five years from this date a prose version of the whole Bible, including as well the apocryphal as the canonical books, had been completed, and was in circulation among the people. For this invaluable gift England is indebted to John Wycliffe. It may be impossible to determine with certainty the exact share which his own pen had in the translation, but there can be no doubt that he took a part in the labour of producing it, and that the accomplishment of the work must be attributed mainly to his zeal, encouragement, and direction[u]. It was not probably until his later years that Wycliffe matured so extensive a design. He was led to the undertaking slowly and gradually; and it was not completed until after several preliminary efforts. It is interesting to mark the several steps by which he advanced in the interpretation and diffusion of holy Scripture. The evidence indeed which bears upon the point is scanty, and only sufficient, it should be remembered, to afford to the conclusions which it suggests, a presumption of their truth[v].

Ac hijs wylle was in the wylle of oure Lord ; and he schal thenche in hijs lawe bothe daȝe and nyȝt.

[u] Early authorities concur in attributing the translation of the Scriptures to Wycliffe, nor do they appear to mention any other name in connexion with the subject. Knighton, in a passage written probably before 1400, laments in forcible terms that Wycliffe should by this means have made the gospel common to the laity: "Hic magister Joannes Wyclif evangelium, quod Christus contulit clericis et ecclesiæ doctoribus, ut ipsi laicis et infirmioribus personis secundum temporis exigentiam et personarum indigentiam cum mentis eorum esurie dulciter ministrarent, transtulit de Latino in Anglicam linguam, non angelicam ; unde per ipsum fit vulgare, et magis apertum laicis et mulieribus legere scientibus, quam solet esse clericis admodum literatis et bene intelligentibus; et sic evangelica margarita spargitur et a porcis conculcatur, et sic quod solet esse carum clericis et laicis, jam redditur quasi jocositas communis utriusque, et gemma clericorum vertitur in ludum laicorum, ut laicis sit commune æternum quod ante fuerat clericis et ecclesiæ doctoribus talentum supernum. . . . . Et sic adimpletum est quod prædixit Willielmus de S. Amore longo ante tempore, et potest applicari congrue de eodem populo, sic inquiens, 'Aliqui laborant ad mu-'tandum evangelium Christi in aliud evangelium, quod 'dicunt fore perfectius et melius et dignius, quod appel-'lant evangelium æternum, sive evangelium Spiritus 'Sancti. Æternum congrue dici potest, quia jam vul-'gare et commune in materna lingua, et sic in æterna 'memoria.'" col. 2644. And again, "Magis tamen congruunt istis novis populis Lollardis qui mutaverunt evangelium Christi in evangelium æternum, id est, vulgarem linguam et communem materiam, et sic æternam, quia laicis reputatur melior et dignior quam lingua Latina." col. 2646. Hus, in his Replica contra Jo. Stokes, written in 1411, thus speaks, "Quod autem Wicliff non fuit Teutonicus sed Anglicus, patet ex suis scriptis. Nam per Anglicos dicitur quod ipse tota Biblia transtulit de Latino in Anglicum, et sæpe in libris suis Latinis scribit resumendo ea quæ dicta sunt in Anglico." Historia et Monumenta, t. i. p. 136. ed. 1715. A remarkable passage bearing on the same point occurs in a letter said to have been written by abp. Arundel and his suffragans to John XXIII. It is found in the Cotton. Ms. Faustina C. 7, and is printed by Wilkins (Conc. t. iii. p. 350), who assigns it to the year 1412. "Hic enim est ille pestilens et damnandæ memoriæ miserrimus Johannes Wycliff, serpentis antiqui filius, imo et ipsius Antichristi prævius et alumnus, qui dum vixerat, in vanitate sensus ambulans, nesciens in semitis justitiæ dirigere gressus suos, non solum canones sacros, et monita paterna despicere, sed piæ matris uterum, quantum in ipso fuerat, viperinis elegit conatibus laniare. Ex cujus denique plantæ nequissimæ radice nefaria, quia serpentini generis posteritas, nedum hortum, sed agrum particulariter occupans, antedictam status ecclesiastici dignitatem et ministeriorum ejusdem famam et opinionem pro viribus sugillare, quin immo et ipsam ecclesiæ sacrosanctæ fidem et doctrinam sanctissimam totis conatibus impugnare studuit, novæ ad suæ malitiæ complementum scripturarum in linguam maternam translationis practica adinventa; nos etc."

[v] In pursuing this inquiry, the reader will derive assistance from a sketch of the leading particulars of Wycliffe's life.—John Wycliffe, according to his biographers, was born near Richmond in Yorkshire, in the year 1324, and at sixteen became a member of Queen's college, Oxford, then recently founded. He was afterwards a fellow of Merton, and the college muniments shew him to have performed the duties of seneschal in January of the year 1356.[1] In April 1361 he was master of Balliol college[2]; the same year he was presented by that society to the rectory of Fillingham in Lincolnshire[3]. At what time he vacated the mastership of Balliol is uncertain[4]. In December 1365 he was appointed by abp. Islip warden of Canterbury Hall[5]. This appointment was superseded by abp. Langham in March and April 1367.[6] But Wycliffe having denied the legality of the abp.'s acts, and appealed to the pope, was not finally deprived until May 1370.[7] In the mean time he had exchanged the rectory of Fillingham for that of Lndgershall in Buckinghamshire, but not distant more than twelve or fifteen miles from Oxford. This exchange was effected in Nov. 1368[8], probably with a view to a more constant intercourse with the university. That such was his motive may be inferred from the terms of a license for non-residence at Fillingham, granted him for two years by the bishop of Lincoln in the preceding April[9]. He had previously been made chaplain to the king, as it seems from the words "peculiaris regis clericus," used of himself in his Determination against the pope's claim of tribute, which tract cannot well be later than 1367.[10] In April 1374 he was presented by the crown to the rectory of Lutterworth in Leicestershire[11], and at the same time, as is presumed, resigned the living of Ludgershall[12]. The same year he was sent with others to Bruges to treat with the pope[13]. On the 6 Nov. 1375 he was confirmed by the crown in the prehend of Aust in the church of Westbury[14]. There is no evidence to shew the date of his appointment, nor from whom he received it; but he must have voided the preferment immediately after these letters of confirmation, as the patent roll records a grant of it on the 18 of the same month of November to Robert de Faryngtone[15]. In Feb. 1377 Wycliffe appeared before the convocation at St. Paul's to answer certain charges of false doctrine. In June following he was denounced from Rome in several papal bulls bearing date the 11 of this month, and transmitting nineteen conclusions drawn from his teaching[16]. In consequence, he was summoned before a meeting of papal commissioners at Lambeth in the early part of 1378,[17] and delivered a paper in answer to the articles objected against him. In 1381 a mandate was published by the chancellor of the university of Oxford, containing a definition of the doctrine of the eucharist, and condemnatory of the opinions supposed to be held by Wycliffe and his party[18]. In May 1382 a synod was convened at the Preaching Friars in London, when twenty-four conclusions were pronounced some heretical and others erroneous[19]. Before this synod Philip Repingdon (afterwards bishop of Lincoln), Nicholas de Hereford, and John Ashton, three of Wycliffe's principal adherents, were interrogated; and on the 20 May Ashton was declared a heretic[20]. The proceedings were continued by adjournment at Otteford and Canterbury, and on the 1st of July, in the chapter-house at this last place, Hereford and Repingdon, not then appearing, were pronounced excommunicate[21]. In the succeeding November, at a convocation held at Oxford, recantations were made by Repingdon and Ashton[22]. According to Knighton, Wycliffe appeared both before the synod at the Preaching Friars, and before this convocation, and delivered on each occasion a profession of his belief regarding the eucharist[23]. But from his name not occurring in the documents of the archiepiscopal register relative to these meetings, it seems more probable that he had previously withdrawn himself from the university, and had taken up his residence at Lutterworth. It is certain that his last years were spent there, and that he continued actively engaged in the duties of his parish, and in maintaining by his writings the principles he had taught, until death interrupted his occupations on the last day of December 1384.[24]

Bokyngham, fol. 199.—At the time of his death he seems to have been employed in completing a summary or body of divinity, comprising, in four books, his opinions both metaphysical (libb. i. ii.) and theological (libb. iii. iv.). The fourth book is divided into four parts; the first two are an exposition of the sermon on the mount; the third treats of Antichrist, from our Lord's discourse in Mt. xxiii.—xxv.; and the fourth, of the discourse to the disciples at the last supper, John xiii.—xvii. This part is unfinished, and ends abruptly in the 14th chapter with the words "sed differre potius disputator. Hæc Augustinus." After which, both in the copy in Trin. Coll. Cambr. as well from the strife of nations and parties as from the discord of the natural elements, cast a general gloom over society. But perhaps nowhere within the realm of England was there a more melancholy spectacle than that which for some years subsequent to the pestilence was presented by the university of Oxford. Dwelling in such a spot, a man of sanguine temperament would almost of necessity become imbued with the notion then generally prevalent, that things were preparing themselves for their great consummation, and that Antichrist's personal appearance was shortly to be expected. This feeling prompted that which is believed to be the earliest production of Wycliffe's pen, The last age of the Church. It was written in 1356[w]. The single copy preserved affords indications, that it is neither a complete nor faithful transcript of the original. But there is enough to shew the sentiments of the author, and with these it was natural for him to turn his thoughts to the prophecies of the Apocalypse. It seems probable that Wycliffe's exposition of this book was written not long after. A paragraph of the text is first given, and then its commentary. This last is brief and simple[x]; the translation of the text is literal, but in some places slightly abridged from the original. Several Mss. of the work remain[y], which differ widely in the translations of the text, the latest copies adopting very closely the second of the versions now printed, while the early copies have no agreement with either of them[z]. In the later copies the commentary also is more modern in its language, and is a little more or less full in its expression.

His commentary on the Gospels.

17. Wycliffe's next exegetical work, though perhaps composed at some distance of time from the preceding, appears to have been a commentary on the Gospels. That on Matthew has a long prologue[a], and still longer epilogue[b]. In the former the writer urges, in strong language, the propriety of translating Scripture for the use of the [x] The following passage will afford a specimen of the commentary, ch. xiii. 11–17. "By the ymage of the beeste ben bitokned the fals prelates that don by the conseil and the enticement of hem that sechen erthelich thinges; that he ȝiueth power to the beeste for to speken, bytokneth the power that thai han to mysdon thorouȝ enchesoun of her dignite; that thai ben sleyn that nylleth nouȝth honouren the ymage, bitokneth that thai shullen acursen hem that nyllen nouȝth consenten to the fals prelates and the wicked; that the beest dude merken alle in her riȝth honde oither in her forehede bitokneth, that alle shullen folewen Antecriste, and none ȝiuen hem to her prelates that don her synne of lecherye priuelich; and than han thai the merk in the hond priuelich, and afterward in the forhede openlich. laity. The commentary runs to considerable length, but consists exclusively of extracts from the writings of previous expositors[c], chiefly taken out of the Catena Aurea of Thomas Aquinas. No commentary has been found upon Mark. The commentaries upon Luke[d] and John[e] are of a similar character to that upon Matthew. The three appear to have been written and published at different times; and in all, the translation of the text agrees with the earlier of the versions now printed.

Contemporary commentary on the Gospels, by another author.

18. It is a remarkable circumstance, that about the time when Wycliffe must have been employed upon the commentaries just mentioned, another also upon the Gospels should have appeared, compiled upon a like principle. The name of the author has not been discovered, but the preface implies that he knew of no previous exposition of the [c] The quotations in these commentaries are made chiefly from Ambrose and Bede; but sometimes from Augustine, Origen, Chrysostom, and various others.

[d] See Mss. in Bodl. 143 and 243; Univ. Libr. Cambr. Kk. 2. 9. The prologue to Luke, which has been found only in Bodl. 143, describes the method which Wycliffe took in these commentaries, and also shews the great value which he set upon holy Scripture. It begins, "Dauith spekynge in the person of Crist seith to God;" and, after citing several texts, thus proceeds: "Herfore [a pore] caityf, lettid fro prechyng for a tyme for causes knowun of God, writith the gospel of Luk in Englysh, with a short exposicioun of olde and holy doctouris, to the pore men of his nacioun whiche kunnen litil Latyn ether noon, and ben pore of wit and of worldli catel, and netheles riche of good will to please God. Firste this pore caitif settith a ful sentence of the text togidre, that it may wel be knowun fro the exposicioun; aftirward he settith a sentence of a doctour declarynge the text; and in the ende of the sentence he settith the doctouris name, that men mowen knowe verili hou fer his sentence goith. Oneli the text of holi writ, and sentence of olde doctouris and appreuyd, ben set in this exposicioun. Whanne Y alegge Ambrose here, ether Bede here, vndurstonde on the same text expowned. Whanne Y alegge eny doctour, and telle not in what place, vndirstonde that Y alegge hym as Alquyn on Luk rehersith him. Ambrose, Jerom, Austyn, and Gregori ben wel knowun for glorioure lyueris and trewe doctouris of holy chirch. Bede is an olde expositour of holy writ, and tellith no thing almest, no but the sentence of olde holy doctouris bifore hym, and he writith opynly and deuoutly and sum tyme sharply. Whanne Alquyn aleggith ony doctour and tellith not where, he takith hym on Luk, as he witnessith in his prologe. He aleggith seint Denyss the martir, seint Gregori Nasansene martir, and seint Cipryan martir; he aleggith myche Teofile, Crisostom, Basill, Cirille, Athanasie, Damassene, and Gregori Nycene; and alle these ben of a thousand ȝere ether more; and her bookis ben appreuyd, as the law witnessith, xv. d. in fine, and xvi. d. confirmamus. Also Alquin alleggith myche the grete Origen, Epiphanye, Eusebie, and Maximus famouse in omelies. These ben of a thousend ȝere and more, and famouse doctouris and noble lyueris. Also he alleggith Ysidre, Tite, and [a] Greek doctour. Thes weren olde men and textual, declarynge wel the text. Whanne a sentence is set in this exposicyon and is aleggid for a glos, thanne it is takun of Alquyn aleggynge other doctours lesse than these biforeseid. If eny lernyd man se this exposicioun and suppose eny errour therynne, for Goddis loue loke he wel his originals, and sette ynne the treue sentence of these doctouris; for men desiren no thing in this exposicioun, no but profitable treuthe for cristen soulis. Y sette shortly and pleynly, as Y may and kan, the sentence of these doctouris, and not barely her wordis, in as myche as thei declaren the text, and seyen treuthe groundid on holi Scripture ether quyk resoun, and accordynge with the blessid lijf of Crist and his apostlis; desirynge that no man triste more than thus to her sentence, nether to eny mannys seying, in what euer staat he be in erthe. Thus with Goddis grace pore cristen men mown sumdel knowe the text of the Gospel, with the comyn sentence of olde holy doctouris, and therynne knowe the meke and pore and charitable lyuyng of Crist and his apostlis, to sue hem in vertues and blys; and also knowe the proude and coueitouse and veniable lyuyng of Antecrist and his fautouris, to fle hem and her cursid dedis, and peynes of helle. For no doute as oure Lord Jhesu Crist and his apostlis profesien pleynli, Antecrist and his cursid disciplis shulen come, and disseyue many men by ypocrisie and tyrauntrie; and the beste armeer of cristen men aȝens this cursid cheuenteyn with his oost, is the text of holy writ, and namely the gospel, and veri and opyn ensaumple of Cristis lijf and his apostlis, and good lyuyng of men; for thanne thei shulen knowe wel Antecrist and his meynee bi her opyn dedis contrarie to Cristis techyng and lyuyng. Crist Jhesu, for thyn endeles power, mercy and charitie, make thi blessid lawe knowun and kept of thi puple, and make knowun the ypocrisie and tirauntrie and cursidnesse of Antecrist and his meynee, that thi puple be not disseyued bi hem. Amen, gode Lord Jhesu." Bodl. 143 (1913).

[e] The prologue to John is as follows: "Prologe Jon. Oure Lord Jhesu Crist, veri God and very man, cam to serue pore meke men, and to teche hem the gospel; and for this cause Seynt Poul seith, that he and othere apostlis of Crist ben seruauntis of cristen men bi oure Lord Jhesu Crist. And eft he seith, Y am dettour to wise men and vnwise; and eft, Bere ȝe the chargis an other of an other, and so ȝe schulen fille the lawe of Crist, that is of charite, as seynt Austyn expowneth. Herfor a symple creature of God, willinge to bere in party the chargis of symple pore men wel willinge to Goddis cause, writith a schort glos in Englisch on the gospel of Joon; and settith onely the text of holy writ, and the opyn and schorte sentencis of holy doctours, bothe Grekis and Latyns, and alleggith hem in general, for to ese the symple wit and cost of pore symple men; remyttinge to the grettir gloos writun on Joon, where and in what bokis thes doctours seyen thes sentences. And sum tyme he taketh the cleer sentence of lawis of the chirche, maad of seyntis, wel groundid in holy writ and pleyn resoun, to dispise synnes and comende vertues. First the text is set, and thanne the sentence of a doctour is set aftir, and the doctour is aleggid in the ende of the same sentence." Bodl. 243 (1933).

Gospels in English[f], and the language accords with the northern dialect in the middle of the fourteenth century[g]. The commentary extends to Matthew, Mark and Luke[h]. The matter is chiefly extracted from the writings of others[i], but original remarks are occasionally introduced. There seems to be nothing of controversial doctrine, and few traces of party feeling. At the same time the writer does not conceal his opinion of the too general corruption and worldliness of the clergy, especially those of the higher orders[k].

Wycliffe's translation of Clement of Lanthony's Harmony.

19. No error will probably be made, if the next step in the progress of Wycliffe's design be ascribed to his[l] Monotessaron, or Harmony of the Gospels[m], a translation from the Latin of Clement, prior of the monastery of Lanthony in Monmouthshire, [f] The preface on Matthew is worthy of being transcribed. "Here begynnes the exposicyone of Seynt Mathew efter the chapytres that bene sette in the bibil, the chapytres of which gospel bene eghte and twenty. This werk som tyme I was styrde to begyne of one, that I suppose veraly was Goddys seruant, and oft tymys prayd me this werk to begyn, seyand to me, that sethyn the gospelle is rewle, be the whilk ich cristen man owes to lyf, and dyuers has draghen in to Latyn, the whilk tung is not knowen to ilk man but only to the leryd, and many lewd men are, that gladly wold kon the gospelle if it were draghen in to Englisch tung, and so it suld do grete profete to man saule, about the whilk profete ilk man that is in the grace of God, and to whome God has sent konnyng, owes hertely to bysy hym. Wherfor I, that through the grace of God began this werk, so styrd as I haue seid before, be sich word, thoghte in my hert, that I was holdun be charyte this werke to begyn; and so this werke I began at the suggestyon of Goddys seruant, and gretly in this doyng I was comforted of other Goddys seruantes dyuers, to sich tyme that thurgh the grace of God I broghte this to ane ende. In the whilk oute draghyng I sette not of myne hede nor of myne owne fantasy, bot as I fond in other expositores. In the whilk draghyng I suppose certanly ther is no thing sette ageyne the feyth, ageyne the hele of sowle, or ellys ageyne the worschype of God. Also in this drawyng, for cawes that I wold not presume of myn owen wytt, I haf to the Latyne and to the sagghis of the doctours als euyn proporcyond the Englisch as I kouthe for the tyme, and as grace was gyfene me for the tyme of draghinge, that bacbyteres suld haf no cawse of chalyngynge. Wherfor to some I suppose it wylle becume the more unsafery in the redynge, bot I suppose, if thei wylle not our ryne, but esely tak with hem the sentence, thei salle fynde gostely edyfycacioun ther in, and no mater of ille spekynge. Wherfor I besek and with alle my hert pray them that this werk redyn, that for me thei pray the mercy of God, that I may fulfylle that is set in the draghing of this boke; and that he at whos soggestyon I this werke began, and thei that [this] werk redyn, and alle cristen men with me, thurgh doynge of that that is wrytyn in this bok, may com to gider to that blisse that neuer salle ende. Amen." Univ. Libr. Cambr. Ii. 2. 12. Then follows a second long prologue.

[g] Mt. ix. 12. is thus translated: "And Jhesus herand seid, The leche is not mystere to the myghti, bot to the ilk hauand." Lk. xvi. 9. thus: "And therfore I sey to ȝow, makys to ȝow frendys of mammone of vneuynhed, that when ȝee fayle, thei reseyue ȝow in to aylastand tabernakyls."

[h] That on Matthew is found in the Mss., Univ. Libr. Cambr. Ii. 2. 12, and Brit. Mus. Egerton. 842; that on Mark and Luke occurs in Corp. Ch. Coll. Cambr. Nasmith xxxii.

[i] As Origen, Augustine, Jerome, Hilary, Ambrose, Isidore, Gregory, Maximus, Rufus, Leo and Bede.

[k] The quotations which follow will shew the manner of the commentator: Mt. vii. 16. "Prechours thei calle hom self, and sey that thei be sent, bot contrary tho thinges to tho apostels thei telle; thei magnyfie martirs, and bene pursuars of martirs. The apostels and martirs of Crist made no pursuynge, bot sufferd; thei kursed none, bot sufferd cursynges and wariynges. Bot fals prophetes pursue men, and vndo cristen men, and blasfemen God, thof not in word, thei do in hor manere." Mt. ix. 38. "And se wele here, that Crist owes to be prayed for, to send prechours to gedere holy kirke. Bot how sal thei preche, bot if thei be sent? and how sal the pepul here with outen the prechours? Bot bischopes of this tyme put hom self wilfully to this charge, and are not chosen or sent, or elles, that wors is, thei thrynge in to this office be money. Alle tho then that com and are not sent, are robbers and theues." Mt. x. 10. "Crist biddes before, that men be warr of the wolues that lifen alle of rauen, and gone in schepes clothynge.... for to schew that tho that thei preche to, owen to gif hom that hom nedes, and thei for to take it. I sey not, to take and to geder to hom and to other loyterers, and to bere away with hom the godes of the pore pepul. Bot whether the reuerce be done in oure dayes, deme iche gud mon and wommon." Egerton 842. ff. 55b. 83b. 87b.

[l] That Wycliffe was the author of this translation is inferred, because, 1. It has been, from the time of Bale, uniformly attributed to him, and never to any other person; 2. It has a very close agreement with his version of the Gospels; 3. The prologue is partly taken from that to his exposition of Matthew, and is altogether in his style of writing.

[m] Many copies exist, as, Brit. Mus. Old R. Libr. 17 C. 33, and 17 D. 8; Harl. 1862 and 6333; Arundel. 254; Bodl. 2553; and Phillipps 7157. That in the Old R. Ms. 17 C. 33, has much the appearance of being the autograph of the author. The vellum is rough, damaged, misshapen and soiled, not such as is usually prepared for a fair copy, and the writing is not that of a professional scribe, but thick, clumsy and irregular; the mistakes of omission, repetition, and verbal inaccuracy are numerous; no sufficient space has been left for the rubrics; the greater part of these have been inserted by a second hand, the same which has corrected many of the errors, and has also written several leaves in the latter part of the volume. This hand is, however, contemporary with the other, as is evident from this last having written the catchwords upon some of these leaves. But a close examination of the errors committed does not sustain the first impression, and one is compelled to conclude that the Ms. has either been transcribed from a still rougher original, or has been taken down from dictation.

who lived in the middle of the twelfth century[n]. The translation differs very slightly from the earlier of the two versions now printed. Besides the original prologue of Clement, some copies have two others added, apparently by the translator. The first of these[o] is the same with the first portion of that prefixed to Wycliffe's Commentary on Matthew. The latter[p] was, it is probable, originally designed by Wycliffe as the preface to the Harmony.

Additions to the Harmony, 17 C. 33.

20. It seems to have been at first intended to attach to the Harmony of the Gospels portions of the Catholic Epistles, and important texts touching faith and practice, selected from other parts of Scripture. The translations found at the end of the Harmony in the Old Royal Ms. 17 C. 33, have evidently been made with the object of supplying an epitome of the doctrines of the Bible. They appear to be first essays not reduced into any strict arrangement or order. Two different translators have employed themselves on the work, using their own, or two different pens. One has written the Harmony and the greater part of the selections; the other has corrected the manuscript of the former, and has also furnished a small portion of the select passages. The selections include, besides a great number of less extensive extracts, the whole epistle of James, the first epistle of Peter, excepting the salutations, part of the second epistle of Peter, and an abridgment of the first epistle of John[q]. The selections from the New Testament made by the first hand, approach for the most part[r] so nearly to the earlier version, as to afford a very strong presumption that they are by the same author, or if not, that they have been adopted as the basis of the corresponding passages in that version[s]. The passages in the Old Testament differ from both versions[t].

[n] A copy of the original Latin is to be found in the Old R. Ms. 3 A. 10. fol. 2; others in Pembroke Hall, Cambr. 1972; Univ. Coll. Oxf. 19; Merton Coll. 240; and Trin. Coll. Oxf. 6.

[o] Printed in vol. i. p. 44. It is extracted almost entirely from Augustine on Christian doctrine.

[p] It is printed hereafter, p. xiv.

[q] In the Bodl. Ms. 2553, at the end of Wycliffe's translation of the Harmony, is a like collection of passages from Scripture; they are extracted from the Catholic Epistles, those of St. Paul, the Acts, and several parts of the Old Testament.

[r] There are some exceptions; for example, the epistle of James differs much, and so the 1 Peter as far as ch. ii. 17; but this last afterwards agrees very closely with the earlier version, as do the other parts of the Catholic Epistles.

Deut. xxviii. 1—8. 17 C. 33. fol. 297.

But if thou schalt here the vois of the Lord thi God, that thou do and kepe alle his maundementis that I bidde thee to dai, the Lord thi God schal make thee hiȝere than alle the folkis that dwellen in erthe. And alle thes blessyngis schulen comen vpon thee, and taken thee, if netheles thou here his biddyngis. Thou schalt be blissid in citee, and blessid in feld, blessid the fruyt of thi womb, and the fruyt of thi lond, and the fruit of thi beestis, the flockis of thi droues, and the foldis of thi schep; blessid thi bernes, and blessid thi relikis. Blessid thou schalt ben in goynge and out goynge. The Lord schal make thin enemyes that schulen rise aȝen thee, fallynge in thi siȝte. Bi o weye thei schulen come aȝens thee, and bi seuene thei schulen flee fro thi face. The Lord schal sende out blessyng vp on thi celeres, and vpon the workis of thin hondis.

Mic. vi. 6—8. 17 C. 33. fol. 300b.

What worthi thing schal Y offren to the Lord? schal Y bowe my kne [kneis pr. v.] to hiȝe God? Whethir Y schal offre to hym brend offryng, and o ȝeris calues? Whethir the Lord may be plesid in thousund of wetheres or in manye thousundis of fatte got buckis? Whethir Y schal ȝeue the firste goten for my felownye, the fruyt of my wombe for the synne of my soule? Y schal schewe thee, thou man, what is good, and what the Lord axith of thee; forsothe to do [iust pr. v.] dom and loue mercy, and besily to go with thi God.

Eph. v. 1—5. 17 C. 33. fol. 229.

Therfore beth foleweris of God, as most dere sones, and goth in loue, as Crist hath loued vs, and bitaken hymself for us, offryng and ost to God in to sauour of swetnesse. But fornycacioun and alle vnclennesse or auarice be not named in ȝou, as it bi semeth seyntis, or filthe or foly speche or harlotrie, that parteneth not to [good pr. v.] thing, but more doinge of thankyngis. Forsothe witith this, vndirstondinge that eche fornicarie, or vnclene or auarous man, that is, seruice of mawmetis, hath not eritage in the rewme of Crist and God.

Phil. ii. 5—11. 17 C. 33. fol. 231b.

And felith this in ȝou that and in Crist Jhesu; the whiche whanne he was in the forme of God, he demede not raueyn him to ben euene to God, but he aneentischide hymsilf, takynge the forme of a seruaunt, in to licnesse of men maad, and in habite founden as man, he lowide hymsilf maad obedient to the deth, ȝhe, the deth of the cros. Wherfore and God hath enhauncid him, and ȝouen him a name that is aboue alle name, that in the name of Jhesu eche knee be bowid, of heuenly, erthely, and of hellis, and eche tunge knowleche for the Lord Jhesu Crist is in the glorie of God the fadir.

[t] It is however worthy of remark, that the ten com-

Additions to the Harmony in Harl. 1862.

21. To the copy of the Harmony in the Harl. Ms. 1862. is subjoined a similar collection of passages from the Bible[u]. Here however they are systematically arranged, in 166 chapters[w], the whole forming a summary of doctrinal and practical theology, which indicates considerable care and judgment on the part of the compiler. The rendering, though literal, is not exact; very frequent abridgments having been made, by omitting the words and clauses which seemed not important to the argument. In some instances transpositions also have been adopted, with the view of making the sense more connected. The translation is executed with freedom and skill[x]. It seems to be perfectly independent, and not derived in any degree from other versions[y], and must be considered as antecedent to either of the two now printed. The Ms. is evidently the original copy of the author[z].

Version of Epistles, etc. in C. C. Coll. Cambr. 434.

22. About the same period, and, though not by either of the translators just mentioned, by one of similar opinions, was produced a curious volume, preserved in the library of Corp. Ch. Coll. Cambridge[a]. It opens with a brief account of man's state in paradise, the fall, and the flood; and proceeds, assuming the form of a dialogue, to describe the calling of the people of Israel, their deliverance from Egypt, and guidance into the promised land. It then treats shortly of the law, moral, civil and ceremonial; and in speaking of this last, breaks off suddenly from the subject of the Old Testament. A few lines[b] then introduce the epistles of Peter[c], James, John and mandments, which form the first passage extracted from the Old Testament, agree verbatim with the later version, except that in our fifth commandment they read worship instead of honour.

[u] The excerpts from the Gospels are very few and very short, shewing that the collection was designed to be taken in connexion with the Harmony prefixed, and together with it, to comprise whatever in holy Scripture was thought necessary to be learned.

[w] Of these an index is prefixed, intitled, The table of sentences and matieris of holi writ. It commences thus:

" Cm. i. God made alle thingis of noȝt.
ij. Of his wil.
iij. Of God merueilous in his dedis, of his myȝt and his wit.
iiij. Feithful, merciful, trewe and riȝtful is God."

[x] The subjoined passages will afford a specimen of the translator's manner:

Gen. iv. 10—15. Harl. 1862. fol. 183.

And the Lord seide to hym, What hast thou don? the vois of the blod of thi brothir crieth to me fro erthe. Now therfore thou shalt ben cursid on erthe that hath opened his mouth and sopen the blod of thi brother, of thin hond; whan thou wirkist it, it shal not ȝyuen to thee hise frutis. Vagaunt and fliȝti thou shalt ben on erthe. And Caym seide to the Lord, More is myn wickidnesse than that I disserue mercy; therfore eche that findeth me, shal slen me. And the Lord seide to Caym, It shal not be don so, but eche that shal slen Caym, shal be seuenefold punshid.

Wisd. xvii. 1—3. Harl. 1862. fol. 171[b].

Lord, grete ben thi domes, and thi wrdis vnable to ben told; for this thing vnlerid soulis han errid. For whil wickede men han stiring to moun lordshipen to the holi nacioun, thei fugitif han leyn, fetterid in bondis of derknesses and of long nyȝt, closid vnder roues of thin euerelastinge wisdam. And whil thei wenen them to moun lurken in derke synnes, in the derke veil of forȝeting thei ben scaterid, dredinge hidously and with to myche merueiling troublid.

1 Tim. i. 8—11. Harl. 1862. fol. 183.

Sotheli wee witen that the lawe is good, if eny vse it lawefulli, witinge this, for to the just man is not lawe put, but to vnjust and not soget, to faderslearis and modir slearis, to vnpitouse men and synneris, to felounes and defoulid men, manslearis and fornycaries, sodomytus and wounderis, to lieris and forsworne men; and if eny other thing is aduersarie to the doctrine that is vpe the gospel of the glorie of blissid God.

Apoc. xvii. 1—5. Harl. 1862. fol. 197[b].

And oon of the seuene aungelis seide to me, Cum, I shal shewen to thee the dampnacioun of the grete hore that sitteth on manye watris, with whom the kingis of erthe han don fornycacioun, and thei that dwellen the erthe ben drunken of hire hordam. And he toc me in to desert in spirit, and I sawȝ a womman sittinge on a red beste, ful of names of blasfemye, hauynge seuene hedis and ten hornes. And the womman was diȝt about with purper and red silc, and gildid with gold and with precious ston and perlis, hauynge a goldene cuppe in hire hond, ful of abhominacioun and vnclennesse of hire fornycacioun; and in hir forhed a name writen, Babilon the grete moder of fornycaciouns and of abhominaciounes of erthe.

[y] The text of the Vulgate which the translator follows, differs from that usually received; for instance, fol. 121. Hebr. xi. he read v. 6. fit for sit; 9. cavulis or cavernis for casulis; 10. exspectabant for exspectabat; 20. defunctus (?) for de futuris; 31. et alia via ejiciens for cum pace.

[z] From a close comparison of the handwriting, as well as the orthography of the two Mss., it appears certain, that the insertions and corrections of the O. R. Ms. 17 C. 33, are from the same pen with Harl. 1862, which pen has also supplied the rubrics in both Mss. A series of passages from the Bible is also found, following Clement's Harmony, in Ms. Bodl. 771.

[a] Marked by Nasmith ccccxxxiv.

[b] " Suster, the apostles that weren most priue with Crist, Peter and James and Jon, wrytith pisteles to the pepel, how thei schullen lyue; and Peter seith on this wyse, Yblessed" etc.

[c] The translator had an indifferent Latin text; for instance, in the first verse translated, 1 Pet. i. 3, it omitted et, and read nos for vos, and unam for vivam.

Jude[d]. After these the dialogue is continued by way of preface[e] to an abstract[f] of the several epistles of Paul, with the exception of that to Philemon. Then follow the Acts of the Apostles; and, this book finished, the translator commences the gospel of Matthew[g]. He seems, however, to have proceeded no further than the Lord's prayer in chap. vi., with which the volume ends. The Ms. is in the western dialect, and probably the original copy[h].

Version of Pauline Epistles in C. C. Coll. Cambr. 32.

23. Among these various essays to translate portions of the Scriptures, there is one other, which, as being of the latter half of the fourteenth century, and also complete, deserves especial notice. It is a version of the whole of St. Paul's epistles. The Latin and English are given paragraph by paragraph; a few verbal glosses are admitted, the translator otherwise keeps closely to his original. The epistle to the Laodiceans is inserted in Latin, in its usual place after that to the Colossians, but without any translation[i].

Opposition apprehended to the translating of Scripture.

24. The persons who were thus engaged in preparing translations of Scripture, anticipated, it is evident, powerful opposition to its circulation among the people, and regarded the task upon which they ventured, as attended with danger to themselves. From this apprehension it is, that the obscurity in part arises which attends the history of these translations; since the authors never make known their names, and are careful to avoid the mention of circumstances which might lead to their detection.

[d] The following extract will shew the character of the translation. The salutation both here and at the end of the epistle is omitted in the Ms.

1 Pet. i. 3—9. C. C. C. C. C. 434.

Yblessed be God, the fader of oure Lord Jhesu Crist, that of his grete merci hath begeten ȝow aȝen into on hope, by the arisynge from deth to lyue of Jhesu Crist, and into an heritage incoruptibel, vndefouled, that may nat welewe, that is ykept in heuene in ȝow, that beth ykept in the vertu of God by feith, in to hele that is redy to ben yschewed in the laste tyme, in the whiche tyme ȝe schulleth ioyen. And now ȝef it behoueth to sorwe to gedere a lytel in dyuerse temptaciounes, that the preuynge of ȝoure feith be more precious than gold that is ypreued in the feer, and be founde in to preysynge and ioye and worschipe in the reuelacioun of Jhesu Crist, whom ȝe loueth that ȝe ne haueth nat yseye, in whom ȝe beleueth that ȝe seth nauȝt, but whan ȝe seth him ȝe schulleth ioyen in a gladnesse that may nat ben ytold, yglorified, and berynge the ende of ȝoure feith, the hele of ȝoure soules.

[e] This preface commences, "Suster, thus han Cristes principal aposteles, Peter and James and Jon and Jude, ywriten to the pepel, to techen hem how thei schulden lyuen vertuouslyche in forsakynge the lykynges of the world and the lykynges of the flesch, as Crist techith in the gospel.—Brother, Y se wel, that these aposteles techeth the pepel as Crist techeth in the gospel; bote natheles, brother, these apostelys weren yordeyned to techen the chyldren of Israel; for oure aunceteres weren hethen men, that weren yturned to hileuen in Crist by Poul the apostel." The preface ends, "The thridde thyng that Poule techeth is, how men schulleth forsake synne in kepynge Cristes lawe of charite; and of this poynt, suster, thorw Goddes grace ich will telle thee what he seith in his pisteles, and of the other poyntes, whan ich haue grettere leyser, with the grace of God. Seynt Poule writeth to the Romaynes, and seith, [ch. v. 19,] Riȝt as by the vnbuxumnesse of on man many men beth ymad synful men," etc.

[f] The author evidently intended to make at some future time a more complete translation, as the following passage in the part of the dialogue mentioned in the last note shews: "bote Y ne may not at this tyme write to thee alle his pisteles, as thei stondeth; bote natheles, ȝef it be Goddes wille, thu schalt habbe hem heraftir." fol. 36b.

[g] The second chapter begins thus, "Werfore whan Jhesus was bore in Bethlem of the Jewery, in the dayes of kyng Heroude, loo! the kynges come fro the est to Jerusalem, seyenge, Where is he that is bore the kyng of Jewys?"

[h] Another copy, omitting the abstract of the Old Testament, and St. Paul's epistles, and giving some alterations of the version, is in the Bodl. Ms. Douce 250.

[i] The commencement of the epistle to the Romans is thus given:

Rom. i. 1—10. C. C. C. C. C. 32.

"Paulus servus etc. Poule seruaunt of Jhesu Crist, callid apostil, departid in to the euangelye of God, the whiche bifore he hadde behiȝt bi his prophetis in holy writtis of his sone, the whiche is maad to hym of the seed of Dauid after the flesch, the which is before ordeynyd Goddis sone in vertu, aftyr the spiryte of makyng holy of the resurreccioun of the deade of oure Lord Jhesu Criste, bi whom we hafe tane grace and ofice of apostil, or power of the office of apostyl, in alle folc to obeische to the feith for the name of hym, among the which ȝee be callid of Jhesu Criste. Omnibus qui sunt, etc. To alle the whiche ben at Rome, lofd of God, callid holy, or in holynesse, grace to ȝou and pees be of God oure fadyr and Lord Jhesu Criste. Primum quidem, etc. Firste namely I do thankyng to my God for alle ȝou, by Jhesu Crist, for ȝoure feith is schewid in al the world. Testis, etc. For witness to me is God, to whom I serue in my spiryt in the euangelye of his sone, that without styntynge I haue maad mynde of ȝou euere in my prayeres, besekynge if any maner at the laste that I haue a gate profitable of comynge other while vn to ȝou in the wille of God."

On the same ground they frequently enter upon a defence of their undertaking, and a refutation of the objections most commonly raised against it. Of this nature is a remarkable tract, or, as it might be called with greater propriety, connected series of tracts, found in a Ms. belonging to the University of Cambridge. The style is not unlike that of Wycliffe, plain and forcible, and the tracts may possibly be his own composition[k].

[k] Univ. Libr. Cambr. Ii. 6. 26. It commences without any rubric or title; "Alle cristene peple stant in thre maner of folke. Sum kunne rede and vnderstonde, as good clerkis and wel letterd men, and for hem ben ordeyned bookis of Ebruse, of Grwe and of Latyn. Summe cunnyn nether rede ne vnderstonde, as lewid peple that kunnen no letter, and for hem God hath ordeinede his creaturis in heuene, in erthe and in the see, to schewe his grace and kuyndnesse to men and wymmen that han discrescion, weereby thei schulden lerne to loue God and drede hym, and kepe his comaundementis, and not by peynture and ymagerye madde by mannis hondus, for the Spirite of God seith in Dauith the profete, Confundantur omnes qui adorant sculptilia, etc. Summe ther hen that kunnen rede but litil, or noȝt vnderstonde, and for hem ben ordent bookis of her moder tongue, to Frensche men bokis of Frensche, to Ytaliens bokis of Latyne corrupte, to Duche men bokis Duche, to Englische men bokis of Englische; in whiche bokis thei mowen rede to konne God and his lawe, and to fulfille it in worde and dede, and so to slec synne in hem silf and ech in other, bi ther power and kunnynge, wher thorouȝ thei mowe desserue eendeles blisse. And that [it] is leful to cristyn peple [to] rede and connen holy Scripture, in destruccion of synne and in cresynge of vertu, it is opyne in many placis of Goddis lawe, bothe old and newe; for thus seith oure Lord God, Erunt verba hec," etc.

Other extracts from the first piece are: p. 5. "And for as moche as the curatis ben often so lewid, that thei vnderstonden not bookis of Latyn for to teche the peple, it is spedful not oonly to the lewed peple but also to the lewed curatis, to have bookis in Englisch of needful loore to the lewed peple; for many curatis kunnen not construe ne expowne her pater noster, ne aue, ne crede, ne the ten comaundementis, ne the seuene dedely synnes, ne many othere thingis, that thei ben bounden to knowe and to teche othere, as the lawe shewith."—p. 6. "Fewe ther ben that wolden be tauȝt, fewe that kunnen teche, and wol fewe that wolen teche; and so Goddis worde and Goddis lawe is neȝ forȝeten in this lond, vertu is forsaken and vice is taken, truthe is in dispit, falshed is in worschip, pees and charite ben exilid, synne and malice, baat and dissencioun regnen, for with outen kepynge of Goddis lawe is no pees."—p. 15. "But ȝif the ten comaundementis, the crede, pater noster and aue, that al cristyn peple owith kunne, commene thingis of holy writte, gospellis and pisteles rede in holy chirche, ben welle translatid and truly, sentence for sentence, with good declaracioun, who so rede it, he schal the better vnderstonden it bothe in Latyn and in Englische." The piece concludes thus, p. 41, "Now, leue frendis, haue I schewed ȝou, that it is leful and nedful to the pepel for to knowe Goddis lawe and the feith of holy chirche in here langage, and that it is leefful and spedful to hem that kunne rede, and nameliche to gentellis, to haue Goddis lawe writen in bookis, that thei mowen red it, and so the better kunne; for it is a comoun sawe, and soth it is, Worde and wynd and mannes mynde is ful schort, but letter writen dwellith. And as seynt Austyn seith, ad Volucianum, that man or woman hath in writinge or in boke, he may rede it al wey; whanne he hath tyme and tome to reden, he may rede whanne he wole, and letten whan he wole, withouten dissese, but he may not alway haue prechynge ne techynge whanne he wolde, and ofte whanne he may haue a techere, he hath no tome. And therfor, leue frend, sith then ȝe kunnen rede, spendedit (sic) ȝoure kunnynge to the worship of God, and whanne ȝe haue tome and tyme of deuocioun, and doth ȝoure deuer after ȝoure staat, to kunne and to vnderstonde Goddis lawe. For Salamon seith, Acceptus est regi minister intelligens, Prouer. xiiij°. The seruaunt vnderstondynge Goddis lawe is acceptable and plesant to the kyng of heuene; and the bettere that ȝe vnderstonden what ȝe reden, the more deuocioun ȝe schullen haue, and the more knowe ȝoure God, and the more ȝe knowen him, the more ȝe schullen loue him, and the more ȝe louen him, the more he schal loue ȝou. Amen."

The second tract in the series deserves to be given entire. It is here printed from the Arundel Ms. 254, collated with Harl. 6333.† In both Mss. it occurs as one of the prologues to Wycliffe's translation of Clement's Harmony. "Oure Lord Jhesu Crist, very God and very man, seith in the gospel, Blessid ben they that heren Goddis word and kepen it. And eft Crist seith, ȝe ben my friends, if ȝe doon tho thyngis that Y comaunde to ȝou. And eft, He that leuith[1] myn comaundementis and kepith hem, he it is that louith me. And eft Danith seith, Blessid ben they that serchen Goddis witnessis[2], and sekyn out God in al the herte. On the contrarie side Dauith seith, They ben cursid that bowyn awey fro Goddis hestis. And Poul seith, He is cursid, that louith not oure Lord Jhesu Crist. But Crist seith, If eny man louith me, he schal kepen my word, and he that louith nat me, kepith not my wordis. God seith by Salamon, The preyer of hym is cursid, whiche turneth[3] awey his ere, that he here not the lawe of God. And Poul seith, He that knowith not Goddis lawe, schal not be knowen of Crist at domesday, for his trewe seruaunt. Crist seith, The wordis whiche Y haue spoken to ȝow ben sperit and lyf. Therfore Petir seith to Crist, Lord, to whom schul we goo; thou hast wordis of euere lastyng lyf. The wyse man seith in the persone of holy writ[4], They that declaren me, schullen haue euerlastyng lyf. And Dauith seith, Lord, the declaring of thy wordis lyȝtenith and ȝyuith vndirstondyng to meke men. The prophete Danyel seith, They that techen many men to ryȝtfulnes, schullen schyne as the firmament. Sithen [thanne[5]] men doyng iustly bodely almesse to nedy men schullen be saued, as Crist seith in the gospel, moche more they schullen be in hiȝ degre of blis, that ȝyuen charitably the greet almes of Goddis word, declaryng it ryȝtly to cristene puple. lyf; and for kepyng and halewyng and confermyng therof, schedde[8] his prescious blod, and ȝaf it writen by his gospeleris to his chirche in erthe, that eche cristen[9] man reule his lyf therby; for if he kepe this gospel, he schal be saued, and ellis in no maner. And thouȝ he coude neuere other lawes maad of synful men, he may come sufficiently and esely to heuene. Alas! ho may for drede of God lette lewid men to knowe and kepe the gospel, and comwnly speke therof in mekenesse and charite, to distrie synnes and plaunte uertues in cristen soulis? But[10] coueitous clerkis[11] of this world replyen and seyen, that lewed men mowe soon erre, and therfore they schul not dispute of cristen feith. Alas! alas! what cruelte is this, to reeve al bodely mete fro al[12] a rewme, for a fewe folis 'mowen be[13] glotons, and do harm to hem self and othere men, be this mete take mesurably[14]. As lyȝtly may 'a proud worldly[15] prest erre aȝeyns the gospel writen in Latyn, as a symple lewid man erre[16] aȝeyns the gospel writyn in Englische. Symple men owen not dispute aboute holy writ, wher it is[17] soth or profitable for[18] mannes soule, but they owen stedfastly bileue that it is verrely[19] soth, and profitable to alle cristen men. For with oute kunnyng and kepyng therof, no man may be delyuered fro peynes of helle; therfor lewed men schullen lerne it of God principally, and by good lyuyng of hem self, and bisy traueil 'of studie[20], and in axyng trewe clerkis bothe of lyuyng and kunnyng, the verrei exposiscioun therof, wher it is derk. For, as seynt Austyn seith, the same truthe is seid openly in holy writ, whiche truthe is sette in derk figuris, profesies and parablis. What resoun is this, if a child faile in his lessoun at the first day, to suffre neuere children[21] come at lettrure for this defaut? who schulde be a clerk by this processe? Euery cristen man takith the state, auctorite and bond of God, ȝhe, in his cristendome, to be a disciple of holy writ, and a real techere therof in al his lyf, vp peyne of dampnacioun, and vp wynnyng of the blisse of heuene. 'What Antecrist[22] dar[23] for schame of cristen men lette lewed men to lerne her holy lessoun, so hard comaundid of God? Eche man is bounden to do so, that he be saued, but eche man that schul be saued, is a real prest mad of God, as holy writ and holy doctours witnessen pleynly. Thanne eche lewed man that schul be saued, is a real prest maad of God, and eche man is bounden to be suche a verri prest. But wordly clerkis crien that holy writ in Englische[24] wole make cristen men at debate, and sugettis to rebelle aȝeyns her souereyns; and therfor it schal not be suffrid among lewed men. Alas! how may they more openly sclaundre God, auctour of pees, and his holy lawe, fully techyng mekenesse, pacience and charite[25]; or ellis they moten seye, that the comwnte of cristen puple is obstinat in her synnes, as fendis ben; or ellis they moten seye, that worldly prestis representyng the state of Cristis vickeris, ben in dispeir for her symony and othere robberis of cristen men, bothe in temporal goodis and spiritual. Thus the false Jewis, namely, hyȝe prestis, scribis and pharisees, cryeden on Crist, that he maad dissencioun in the puple. Jhesu Crist, that deidist to conferme thy lawe, and for raunsome of cristene soulis, stoppe these blasphemyes of Antecrist, and worldly clerkis, and make thyn holy gospel knowen and kept of thy symple bretheren, and encrese hem in feith, hope and charite, and meknesse and pacience, to suffre deth ioyfully for theo and thy lawe. Amen, Jhesu, for thy mercy!"

The seventh piece in the series is thus intitled, This tretis that folewth, proueth that eche nacioun may lefully haue holy writ in here moder tunge. The following passages occur in it: p. 85, "And thus oure Antecristis now, suynge the Farisees, tellen not verilich the truthe of the gospel, for thei lyuen contrariously therto."—p. 87, "And thus ȝif, thorouȝ necligence of oure bischopis and prelatis and other fals techeres that ben in the chirche, the truthe of Goddis word be not sowen to the pepel, praie we," etc.—p. 88, "Loke whether oure clerkis don now as yuel or worse, and namely oure religious, that ben fayners of holines, the whiche pursuen Crist in hise membris, as the Farisees diden his owne person."—p. 89, "So now in these daies thei shewen hem faynet loueres and vntrwe children of Crist, that pursuen symple pepel, for thei wolden lerne, rede, and teche the lawe of God in here moder tunge."

Many passages from other writings of the time might be quoted, to shew the apprehensions which the translators felt for their own personal safety, and the opposition which they had to encounter in circulating the Scriptures. The two following are remarkable.

The author of the volume (Corp. Ch. Coll. Cambr. ccccxxxiv.) before noticed, when requested to teach the lewed and uncunning what is needful for their souls, replies, "Brother, I knowe wel, that I am holde by Crystis lawe to parforme thyn axinge, bote natheles we beth now so fer yfallen awey fram Cristis lawe, that if Y wolde answere to thyn axingus, I moste in cas vnderfonge the deth; and thu wost wel, that a man is yholden to kepe his lyf as longe as he may. And perawnter it is spedful to holden oure pes awhile, tyl that God foucheth saf, that his wille be yknowe; for now the world is ful of wikkednesse," etc.

Wycliffe in a homily on the text, Cum persecuti vos fuerint, writes, "And algates they dyspysen that men schulden knowe Cristus lyfe, for thenne prestus schulden schome of hyre lyues, and specyaly these hye prestus, and for they reuersen Crist bothe in worde and in dede. And herfore on gret byschop of Englelond, as men sayen, is yuel payed that Goddes lawe is wryten in Englysche to lewede men, and he pursueth a prest, for he wryteth to men this Englysche, and sompnet hym, and traueleth hym, that hyt is harde to hym to route; and thus he pursueth another prest by the helpe of Pharysees, for he precheth Cristus gospel frely with outen fables. O men that ben on Cristus halfe, helpe ȝe nowe aȝeynes Antecrist, for the perelouse tyme is comen, that Crist and Poule tolden byfore. But on coumfort is of knyghtes, that they saueren muche the gospel, and hauc wylle to rede in Englysche the gospel of Cristus lyf, for afterwarde, ȝef God wul, the lordeschype schal be taken fro prestes, and so the stafe, that maketh hem hardy aȝeynus Crist and hys lawe." *Ms. Magd. of the Gospels was extracted from the commentary upon them by Wycliffe, and to these were added the Epistles, the Acts, and the Apocalypse, all now translated anew. This translation might probably be the work of Wycliffe himself; at least the similarity of style between the Gospels and the other parts favours the supposition. Prologues[l] were prefixed to the several books, agreeing with those commonly found in Latin Mss. of the fourteenth century. It seems questionable, whether the prologues were translated by the same hand as the text, and if they were added subsequently, it will account for the circumstance of their being wanting in several of the copies[m]. Short verbal glosses are frequently introduced into the text[n].

The New Testament probably by Wycliffe.

26. It is to be observed, that the copies now existing give the original translation with various degrees of fidelity, and that in some it has undergone considerable revision and alteration. Of the fifteen which have been collated, it may be assumed for certain, that the Mss. A, K, W, and Y represent most accurately the text as it stood at first. With these G, M, and P generally agree. These three seldom differ from each other, except through the errors made by the first scribe of G, or in consequence of the alterations by the second. S substantially agrees with the four first-mentioned Mss., but has a few readings peculiar to itself, or in common with X or O. X also substantially agrees with the four first-mentioned Mss., but is singular in almost uniformly omitting the textual glosses, and has some readings of its own. N has a general agreement with the same four Mss., but has readings which are often erroneous, and which at other times correspond with those of O and V. Q agrees for the most part with G, M, and P. It often omits the ordinary glosses, and in the epistles of St. Paul offers long expository glosses, which as far as the epistle to the Ephesians are peculiar to itself, but subsequently are found in T likewise. These glosses in Q end with the epistle to Titus, but in T are continued through Philemon and the Hebrews. T, besides the peculiarity just noticed, has a few readings of its own, not important. It generally agrees with G, M, P, and Q. V is a copy remarkable for its variations. In the Gospels it frequently omits the ordinary glosses, and throughout offers textual glosses of its own. It has very numerous readings found in no other Ms. These are more frequent after the Gospels, and approach the second version much more nearly than those of any other copy. Indeed the agreement with the second version is sometimes so marked, that one is induced to suppose the Ms. a revision of the earlier text made by the second translator previously to the adoption of the principles by which he was finally guided in preparing his version. It has also, subsequently to 1 Cor. vi., large marginal glosses, some of which have not been discovered elsewhere, and the greater part of them only in this volume and in the Harl. Ms. 5017, which is of the later version. U presents in part of Matthew, in Mark, and in Luke, so frequent a concurrence with V, that there can be no doubt of these

Some copies of the New Testament revised and altered.

[l] The prologues to the Gospels are those usually ascribed to Jerome: 1. Matthæus ex Judea—non tacere. 2. Marcus evangelista—Deus est. 3. Lucas Syrus natione—fastidientibus prodidisse. 4. Hic est Johannes—doctrina servetur. The prologue to the Romans is made up of the general prologue to the Pauline epistles, Primum quæritur—manentem substantiam; and the special prologue to this particular epistle, Romani sunt—concordiam cohortatur; this last however being in parts abbreviated. It is remarkable, that in four Mss. G, K, Q and Y, a large portion of this prologue is inserted in that of the gospel of Luke; which mistake has apparently arisen from the misplacing of a leaf in one of the original copies. To each of the epistles of Paul is prefixed the usual brief argument. The Ms. O has an addition to the ordinary argument of 1 Tim., and Mss. G and V give another version of that to Philemon. The Acts have the prologue beginning, Lucas Antiochensis, and ending, proficeret medicina. To the Catholic Epistles is prefixed the epistle of Jerome to Eustochium, beg. Non ita, and ending, poscentibus denegabo; and lastly, the Apocalypse is introduced by the shorter of the two prologues usually given in the editions of the Vulgate, beg. Johannes apostolus, and ending, doctrina servetur.

[m] The Mss. A, M, P, W, have no prologues to the Gospels; G, M, P, Q, X, and generally A, are without prologues to the other books.

[n] As Mt. i. 2, gendride, or bigate; 19. iust, or riȝtful; pupliche, or lede ferther; 20. sleepe, or sweuen; 23. interpretid, or expowned.

Mss. having been copied one from the other, or both from a common original. In parts of Matthew V differs from U, and in other parts has been made to agree with it by a second hand[nn]. O throughout Matthew agrees very closely with U and V; in John it has the later version; in the other books it has more frequently readings of its own, or follows the generality of Mss. It often omits the textual glosses, and occasionally adopts the gloss instead of the text. It is a singular circumstance, that in the gospels of Luke and John K ceases to be a transcript of the original text, and agrees in its readings with U and V.

27. Probably while the New Testament was in progress, or within a short time of its completion, the Old Testament was taken in hand by one of Wycliffe's coadjutors. The original copy of the translator is still exstant in the Bodleian Library[o]. It is corrected throughout by a contemporary hand. A second copy, also in the Bodleian Library[p], and transcribed from the former previously to its correction, has a note at the end, assigning the translation to Nicholas de Hereford[q]. This note was evidently made not very long after the Ms. was written, and there need be no hesitation in giving full credence to its statement[r]. It is remarkable, that both these copies end abruptly in the book of Baruch, breaking off in the middle of a sentence[rr]. It may thence be inferred, that the writer was suddenly stopped in the execution of his work; nor is it unreasonable to conjecture further, that the cause of the interruption was the summons which Hereford received to appear before the synod in 1382. Soon after that event he left England, and was absent for some time. The translation itself affords proof, that it was completed by a different hand, and not improbably by Wycliffe himself[s].

[nn] It is remarkable that the Mss. U and V, and these only, either in this or the later version, have the four introductory verses of Luke; which are given as they appear in Wycliffe's Commentary on that gospel, and are evidently borrowed thence.

[q] Nicholas de Hereford, D.D. of Queen's College, Oxford[1], was in 1382 one of the leaders of the Lollard party in that University. On Ascension day in the same year, he preached, by the appointment of the chancellor, at St. Frideswide's. A few days subsequently, on the 18th May, he appeared upon citation before the synod at the Preaching Friars in London[2], where on the 20th of the same month he delivered a paper containing his opinions, and at an adjourned meeting, held at Canterbury on the 1st July, was pronounced excommunicate[3]. From this sentence he appealed to the pope[4], and is said, in prosecution of his appeal, to have proceeded to Rome, and there to have been placed in confinement; but having with other prisoners been released by the populace during an insurrection, to have returned to England, and soon after to have been committed by the archbishop to prison for life[5]. A letter of the archbishop, dated 15 Jan. 1386, is exstant, requesting the issue of a writ for his caption[6]. Ant. Wood also states, that Hereford suffered much with John Purvey in Saltwood castle[7]. But from a mandate of the bishop of Worcester it would appear, that in Aug. 1387 he was still at liberty, and actively engaged in spreading doctrines considered objectionable[8]. He could not, it is certain, have remained in prison for any very great length of time, since on the 12th Dec. 1391, he received from the crown letters of protection against those who might trouble him, on account, as it seems, of his former Lollard opinions[9]. In Oct. 1393 he appears to have been present at the examination of Walter Brute at Hereford, accused of heresy[10]. On the 16th Feb. 1394 he was made chancellor of the church of Hereford[11], and on the 20th March 1397 treasurer in that cathedral. It is probably to these preferments that allusion is made by Thorpe, in the narrative of his examination before archbishop Arundel in 1407[12]. Hereford resigned his office of treasurer in 1417[13], and entered the Carthusian monastery of St. Anne, Coventry, where he died[14].

Prologues and glosses in Old Testament.

28. The prologues in the Old Testament as in the New, are for the most part those usually found in contemporary Mss. of the Vulgate[t]. The Old Testament has no marginal glosses, neither does it appear to have been the intention of Hereford to admit glosses into the text; those which occur in it previously to Baruch iii. 20, are the insertions of a second hand[u]. Subsequently to this place textual glosses are frequent[w].

Mss. of the Old Testament offer few variations.

29. The Mss. of the Old Testament are remarkably uniform in the readings of the text. They may probably be classed according to date in the following order, E, C, B, K, Y, A, F, H, G, D, X. This last copy always omits the glosses, and offers greater variations than any of the others, but they are frequently unauthorised and erroneous[x].

style subsequent to Bar. iii. 20 is entirely different. It is more easy, no longer keeps to the order of the Latin, takes greater freedom in the choice of words, and frequently admits textual glosses. In the course of the first complete chapter the new translator inserts no less than nine such glosses. He does not admit prologues.

The translation of this last part of the Old Testament corresponds with that of the New Testament, not only in the general style, but also in the rendering of particular words. Dilectus, for instance, though sometimes rendered loued, is generally translated dereworth, as Bar. iii. 37; Dan. iii. 35; Rom. xvi. 8; Eph. i. 6; James i. 16; ii. 5; whereas by Hereford it is rendered either loued, as Deut. xxxii. 15; Ps. xxviii. 6; xliv. 1; lix. 7; lxvii. 13; cxxvi. 2; Wisd. iv. 10: Is. v. 1; xxi. 4; Jer. xi. 15; or leef, or lemman, as Prov. xxxi. 2; Song of S. i. 12, 13, 15; ii. 3; vi. 1, 2, etc.

Again, the word secundum, which by Hereford is uniformly translated after, is subsequently to Bar. iii. 20, and in the New Testament very frequently rendered up, as Dan. ii. 45; Hos. ii. 3; Mic. vii. 15; Zech. i. 6; 1 Macc. i. 15, 42, 44; iii. 39, 56; Rom. vii. 22; 11 Cor. viii. 3; 1 Pet. i. 2, 3, 15, 17; iii. 7; iv. 6; v. 2, etc.

The word insanio is by Hereford uniformly rendered to wexe wood, as 1v Kings xix. 28; Is. xxiv. 6; Jer. xxv. 16; but hy the translator of the remaining portion of the Old Testament and in the New, though sometimes to wexe wood, yet more frequently to be wood, as Ezek. xxiii. 9; 11 Macc. iv. 4; 1 Cor. xiv. 23; and sometimes to mad, with one or other of the former expressions as a gloss, or without any gloss, as Joh. x. 20; Acts xii. 15; xxvi. 11, 24, 25.

The word puella is by Hereford translated, accordingly as the person referred to is presumed to be unmarried, wife, widow, or servant, mayde-child, maydeseruant, mayde, womman, child-womman, hand-womman, but never, so far as it has been observed, damsel or wenche; but in the latter part of the Old Testament and in the New, not only mayde-child and mayde, but much more frequently damsel, as Dan. xiii. 15, 19, 20, 36; or wenche, as Amos ii. 7; Mt. ix. 25; xiv. 11; Mk. v. 39; vi. 22; vii. 30; Lk. viii. 50; Acts xii. 13; xvi. 16.

The word præpositus seems to be uniformly rendered by Hereford provost, as Gen. xl. 23; 1 Par. xxiii. 4; Esth. ii. 3; Is. xxii. 15; lx. 17; Jer. xxxvii. 14; lii. 25; but in the other parts of the early version, prepost or souereyn, as Dan. i. 3; 1 Macc. xii. 45; Acts vii. 10; or prepost, as Dan. i. 7, 8; 1 Macc. xiii. 37; or prepost or governour, as 1 Macc. xiv. 42; or souereyn, as Hebr. xiii. 7, 24; or provost or prelate, as Hebr. xiii. 17; and once only provost, 11 Cor. xi. 32.

The word vultus is translated by Hereford cheer; but by the other translator, semblaunt, as Ezek. i. 10; ii. 6; Lk. xxiv. 5; sometimes face, as Mal. i. 9; or cheer or face, as Ezek. ii. 21; Hebr. ix. 24.

The word idolum is by Hereford translated mawmet, but by the other translator idol, as Ezek. vi. 4; xiv. 5; Amos i. 5; 1 Macc. i. 45; Acts xxi. 25; 1 Cor. v. 10; vi. 9; viii. 1, 7, 10; x. 14; 1 Pet. iv. 3; Apoc. xxii. 15; and at Rom. ii. 22, idol or mawmet.

[t] To Genesis is prefixed the epistle of Jerome to Paulinus, and also his epistle to Desiderius; these two are joined together so as to make one preface, the last-mentioned epistle forming the ninth chapter. Joshua and 1 Kings have each the usual prefaces of Jerome. To the 1 Paralip. is prefixed Jerome's epistle to Chromatius, with another brief argument; to the 11 Paralip. Jerome's epistle to Dominio and Rogatian. The 1 Esdras has the usual epistle of Jerome, a brief argument, and a brief "Commendation of Esdras." Before Tobit is placed Jerome's epistle to Chromatius and Heliodorus, and before Judith and Esther the prefaces designed by him for those books. Judith has also a short argument. The book of Job has Jerome's two prologues. The Psalms have also two prologues; the latter found in some Mss. of the Vulgate. To Proverbs is prefixed Jerome's epistle to Chromatius and Heliodorus, and to Ecclesiastes that to Paula and Eustochium. Wisdom has a short prologue. Isaiah is preceded by Jerome's epistle to Paula and Eustochium. Jeremiah has two prologues, the former being the epistle of Jerome to the same individuals. Baruch has the short prologue, usually found in copies of the Vulgate. The succeeding books of the Old Testament have no prologues.

[u] There are none in any of the books until Proverbs, where four or five are found; there is a single gloss in Ecclesiastes, and six or seven in Wisdom; but in Ecclesiasticus they are numerous, and the succeeding books down to Baruch iii. 20 have several. All these glosses, with the exception of one or two peculiar to G, have their origin in the corrections introduced by the second hand of the original copy E. (Bodl. Douce 369.)

[w] In this subsequent part a few of the glosses have been added on some after revision or transcription: these are found chiefly in the Mss. G or H, or both. See Bar. vi. 60; Ez. xxxiii. 17; Dan. ii. 29; xiv. 12; Hag. i. 9; 1 Macc. v. 42; vii. 18, 20, 22; x. 74; 11 Macc. vii. 2, 5; xi. 4.

[x] The Mss. X and Y were not obtained by the editors in time to print from them collations of the text of the Old Testament. The following is a specimen of their

30. The translation of the whole Bible having been thus completed, the next care was to render it as extensively useful as possible. With this view, a table of the portions of Scripture read as the epistles and gospels of the church service on the Sundays, feasts and fasts of the year, was framed[y]. This table was inserted in certain copies of the newly translated Bible[z], and the passages were marked in the text by letters placed in the margin over against the beginning and end of the several portions; or sometimes the margin contained a rubric stating at length the service for which the lesson was appointed[a]. To some copies of the New Testament such portions of the Old were annexed, as were used in the church service instead of epistles[b]. In order also to render those parts of Scripture in most frequent use accessible at a less cost, books were written containing nothing more than the gospels and epistles read in the service of the mass[c]. *Table of Epistles and Gospels. [f] Wycliffe's Homilies deserve a more extended notice. In these the whole epistle or gospel of the day is generally given in English, and explained paragraph by paragraph. The translation agrees with neither of the printed versions, as will be seen from the following example.

Mt. ii. 13—18. The gospel on children masse day. The Lordis aungel apperide to Joseph, and seide, Rise, take the child and his modir, and fle in to Egipt, and be thou there til that I seie to thee; for it is to come, that Heroude seke the child, for to leese him. And Joseph roos up, and took in the nyȝt the child and his modir, and fledde in to Hegipt; and Joseph was there to the deeth of Heroude. And this was don of Joseph to fulfille that that was seid bi the profete, Out of Egipt I clepide my sone—And thanne Heroude saie, that he was disseyued of the kingis, and was ful wrooth, and sente into Bethlem, and sloow alle the children that were in Bethlem, and in alle the coostis biside, that weren of two ȝeer and withyn, aftir the tyme that he souȝte out of these kynges.—And thanne was fulfillid that was seid hy Jeremye, A vois was herd in hiȝ, which vois was a weping and greet weilyng, Rachel was wepinge hir children, and sche wolde not be coumfortid, for thei weren not. Old R. Libr. 18. B. 9. fol. 14.

The Ms. from which the above quotation is made contains a large collection of these homilies, both on the epistles and gospels. The collection is divided into three parts; the first, comprising 120 homilies for the Sundays and ferials; the second, 31 homilies for the Commune sanctorum; and the third, 27 homilies for the Propre sanctorum; to which is added an exposition of our Lord's prophecy on the mount, reciting the whole of the xxiv. chap. of S. Matthew. This it would seem from the preface, was not delivered as a homily, but designed for circulation as a written tract. It begins, "This gospel tellith moche wisdom that is hid to many men, and speciali for this cause, that it is not al red in chirche. But sith it is of euene autorite with othir gospels of Crist, and of hid sentence and good, that were profitable to the chirche, summen wolden seie it in ther modir langage, as thei can. And al if Holy Scripture, and the importance he attached to its general circulation. Yet the new version was not altogether satisfactory. The part translated by Hereford differed in style from the rest; it was extremely literal, occasionally obscure, and sometimes incorrect; and there were other blemishes throughout incident to a first essay of this magnitude, undertaken under very unfavourable circumstances, by different persons and at different times, upon no agreed or well defined principle. These defects could not have escaped the attention of Wycliffe, and it is by no means improbable that he suggested, if he did not himself commence, a second or revised version of the whole Bible. But whatever part he might take in its origin, it is thei witen wel, that this text is of bileeue, netheles the expownyng is supposid bynethe bileeue. And thei ben redi to take mekeli beter witt, if it be tauȝt hem, and to forsake ther owne witt, if ony teche that it is fals." Ibid. fol. 176.

The matter of these homilies is practical, and the language bold, the author excluding the legends and tales in which much of the pulpit teaching of those days consisted. Touching this point he observes in his postill on Lk. ii. 33, "To summen it plesith for to telle the talis that thei fynden in seyntis lyues, or withouten hooli writt. And such thing plesith ofte more the puple. But we holden this manere good to leue suche wordis, and truste in God, and telle surely his lawe, and specialy hise gospels; for we trowen that thei camen of Crist, and so God seith hem alle. And these wordis, sith thei ben Goddis, schulden be takun as bileeue, and more wolen thei quykene men, than othir wordis that men knowen not." Ibid. fol. 14b. The contrast is striking between the style of Wycliffe's homilies and of those most widely used in the following century. Such may be found in the book commonly intitled The Festial, of which copies exist in Mss. Harl. 2347, 2391; Linc. Cath. A. 2. 15, etc.

A very early collection of postills occurs in a book called The Mirrur, in the Harl. Ms. 5085. They are upon the gospels for the Sundays and some of the principal feasts of the year. The preface shews the writer to have had just views as to teaching the gospel in English, and not to have been free from apprehension of blame or mischief to himself in consequence. "Therfore whan ȝe han wille for to reden, taketh forth this boke. The godspelles of the sonundaies and a parti of other massedaies ȝe schul finde here inne; first the texte, and thanne the vnderstondinge therof. Sotheliche wit ȝe wel, ther nis nouȝt o word writen inne, that it nis drawen out of holy writ, and out of the bokes that thes holi men han made, that weren here to foren. Latin ne wil I sette non ther inne, for it semeth as it were a prid for to telle another that he ne vnderstondeth nouȝt. And so it is a gret folie for to speke Latin to lewed men. For iche man schal ben vndernommen at the dai of dome efter his owen langage." fol. 1b. "Mi name ne wil I nouȝt nemni, for the enemis that miȝht heren it, and miȝt drawen ȝoure hertes fram gode that had wille to here it. For it is the maner of the enemis for to ben grucchand and noious, and wil blethelich coniecten the wordes of holy writ, and wil tellen it on hir maner, and ne letten nouȝt for to blamen other; the wikked wenen for to amenden it, for to blamen the gode and coniecten hem." fol. 2. "Nou iche biseche ȝou alle that heren this writ, that hu biseche to God almiȝti that he defende me fram all iuels, and so for to maken this werke that it mai plesen to God; so that efter the passing out of this lif, that I mai be in the compaine of his holi halwen. For this werk I do sothe for me and for alle men. For alle ne han nouȝt al holi writ. Swiche heren the godspel and reden it, that ne vnderstondeth nouȝt it what it saith. And for to don alle men for to vnderstonden it, in God ich dar take this werk on honde, that alle men mai vnderstonden openliche what the godspel techeth hem. For al he mai sen in this writt, what the Latin amounteth. Suffissauntliche hij moun heren here al that nedeth to hem. I ne sai nouȝt for the clerkes that ben founded in holi writ, ac for hem that ben lasse vnderstondinge, as ich am mi seluen, that ne mai nouȝt serchen al, ac vnnethes pare the fruite." fol. 6b.

The subjoined specimen will afford an idea of the translation.

Jhesus saide to his disciples, It was a riche man, and was clad in pourper and bis, and ich dai was fedde deliciouslich. And ther was a begger that hiȝt Lazarus, that lai at his ȝate ful of biles, that couaited for to ben fild of the crummes that fel fro the riche mannes bord. And no man ȝaf him hem; ac houndes com and licked his biles. And the begger died, and was borne with aungels into the bosom of Abraham. And the riche is ded, and beried in helle. And he loked vp with his eiȝe as he was in turment, and sauȝ Abraham fro fer, and the laser in his bosom. Harl. 5085, fol. 86b.

There is exstant also another collection of postills on the gospels for the Sundays and great festivals, not Wycliffe's, but composed about the same time as his. Copies are in the University Libr. Cambr. Kk. 6. 2. and Kk. 6. 28. The following is the translation of part of the gospel for Septuagesima Sunday.

Mt. xx. 1—10. The kyngdom of heuenes is lijk to an housebonde man, that ȝede out first in the morewnynge for to hiire werke men in to his vyne ȝerd; and couenaunt maad with the werk men for a peny huyre a day, he sent hem into his vyne ȝerd. And whanne he was goon oute aboute the thirdde hour of the day, he saw othere stondynge ydile in the market. And he seide to hem, Goth ȝee also in to my vyne ȝerd, and that that is riȝtwise I shall ȝeue to ȝou. And thei ȝeden forth. And eft soones he ȝede forth aboute the sixte and the nynthe hour, and dide on lyk maner. Also he ȝede forth aboute the elleuenthe hour, and fond othere stondynge; and he seid to hem, What stonden yee here al day ydile? Thei seiden to hym, For no man hath huyred us. He seide to hem, Gooth ȝee also in to my vyne ȝerd. And whanne euen was maad, the lord of the vyne ȝerd seide to his proketour, Clepe the werkmen, and ȝelde hem her meede, bygynnynge at the laste, and so to the firste. Great errors as to the date, and relative priority of the two versions.

33. That the version which has been described in the preceding paragraphs is to a greater or less degree the work of Wycliffe; that it is the earlier of the two versions now printed, and the earliest translation of the whole Bible in the English language, admits of no reasonable doubt. Yet when the present edition was commenced, an opposite opinion prevailed, and it was generally believed that the version which is really the later in point of date preceded the other. Indeed from an early period very confused and erroneous notions seem to have been formed regarding our vernacular translations of Scripture. Sir Thomas More in his Dialogues, anxious to save the Romish party from the scandal of withholding the word of God from the laity, maintains that long before the days of Wycliffe the whole Bible had been translated into the English tongue, and vouches for himself having seen copies of this kind[g]. Thomas James, though he had the opportunity of examining several Mss. of the Wycliffite versions, was led into a similar mistake, and he describes one of them as a Bible in the English tongue, long before the coming of Wycliffe[h]. From him archbishop Usher adopted the error, assigning the translation to the year 1290, or thereabouts[i]. Henry Wharton in his Auctarium to the archbishop's work, which, it should be observed, was posthumous and unfinished, truly determined the respective characters and dates of the two versions; rightly giving the earlier to Wycliffe, and the later to the author of the General Prologue, whom however he erroneously conjectured to be John Trevisa[k]. Dr. Waterland, who greatly assisted Lewis in obtaining information for his History of the English translations of the Bible, was at first inclined to think that both versions were the work of Wycliffe[l], but afterwards concluded that the later version and the General Prologue were by John Purvey[m]. Unfortunately having but little leisure for the investigation, he was induced by a comparison of the style and language employed in the versions, to reject the criteria of Wharton, and to take for the earlier of the two that which was in fact the later[n]. Lewis adopted the opinions of Dr. Waterland, and interweaving in his narrative the information supplied to him much as it came to his hands, has compiled an account which is not only confused but sometimes inconsistent with itself. Mr. Baber when he reprinted Lewis's edition of the New Testament, which is not the version of Wycliffe but of the later translator, repeated this mistake[o]. He appears to have been misled by passages of Scripture in Wycliffe's Homilies, which, he imagined, generally agreed with the later version. The truth is, that in these homilies Wycliffe translated from the Latin before him at the time, with no attempt at great exactness, and the passages which can be selected from them differ no less, or perhaps more, from the later, than from the earlier text[p].

[g] Dyalogues, ed. 1530, foll. cviii. cxi. cxiv.[b] They are described as Bibles fair and old, written in English, which had been known and seen by the bishop of the diocese. Such must have been copies of one or both of the Wycliffite translations: of these we know that at the reformation manuscripts were in the hands of prelates of the church, and other persons of distinction. One (now Lambeth 25), belonged to bp. Bonner, and a second (now Magd. Coll. Cambr. Pepys 2073), to Will. Weston, prior of St. John's Clerkenwell. If any other translation of the whole Bible had been in existence, some traces of it would undoubtedly have remained in modern times. The Constitution of abp. Arundel in 1408, upon which sir T. More is commenting in the above cited passage, appears to refer to two translations and to two only, one of them composed lately in the time of John Wycliffe and the other since his death. Nor, in case of a previous translation, would the Wycliffites have failed to cite the fact in justification of their own proceeding. But their writings clearly imply that they knew of none such, and regarded their own as the first version of the whole Bible. It is true that a curious tract, which must have been written between 1399 and 1414, (see hereafter, p. xxxiii.) mentions a Bible possessed by one Wering of London, which had been seen by many, and seemed two hundred years old. If any dependance can be placed on the presumed age, this must have been some Anglo-Saxon version, perhaps Ælfric's Heptateuch.

The earlier version clearly pointed out by the testimony of the General Prologue.

34. A very cursory examination of the two texts now published will be sufficient to convince any one, who is qualified to form a judgment, that the version printed by Lewis is the later of the two. The other text is found in those Mss. which are the earlier in point of date. These are comparatively rare, as, when superseded by a later translation, they would naturally become. In one or two Mss. which contain partly one text, and partly the other, the early text occupies the first place[q]. The language is rather the more antiquated, and the style more involved and difficult, whilst the variations of the second text are such as would arise from the alterations of a revising hand. But it is the General Prologue which is decisive of the question. The author who speaks of the Bible of late translated, as requiring correction[r], in giving the rules which he adopted in order to make the required improvement, lays them down with sufficient precision to identify the corrected version without any chance of mistake.

1. As to the general method taken in the later version.

35. The method, he tells us, which he took was this[s]. He first, with the assistance of several fellow labourers, corrected the Latin text by comparison of old Bibles, doctors and glosses[t]. Secondly, he studied the text thus corrected with the gloss and other authorities, particularly Lyra on the Old Testament[u]. He then made special reference to the works of grammarians and theologians, for the meaning of difficult words and passages. And lastly, he translated, not literally, but according to the sense and meaning as clearly as he could[v]; taking care to have many persons of ability present at the correction of the translation.

2. As to the translation of particular phrases.

36. This last process of avoiding too literal a translation, and rendering the English as plain or plainer than the Latin, is exemplified in several particulars. First, the author of the prologue proceeds to say, an ablative absolute may be resolved into the verb with a particle prefixed, such as, the while, for, if, when, after, or and[w]. Secondly, a participle of the present or preterite tense may be resolved into the same tense and a copulative conjunction[x]. Thirdly, the relative may be resolved into its antecedent with a copulative[y]. Fourthly, a word, though only once set in the original,

Hebr. iii. 6. 1 v. fidem firmam, 2 v. finem firmam; iv. 1. 1 v. fidei, 2 v. spei. It will be observed, that the reading adopted in the second version is not always that of the greatest authority.

[u] In the earlier version of the Old Testament Lyra is never quoted; but perpetually in the glosses of the later version.

[v] Examples may be found in every page, as, Gen. iii. 1 .1 v. lifers, 2 v. lyuynge beestis; iii. 7. 1 v. hemsilf to be nakid, 2 v. that thei weren nakid; iii. 14. 1 v. soul-hauers, 2 v. lynynge thingis; vii. 14. 1 v. iumentis, 2 v. werk-beestis; ix. 15. 1 v. to al flesh to be don awei, 2 v. to do awei al fleish.

[w] The instance he gives, vol. i. p. 57, is from Lk. xxi. 26, and men shulen wexe drie for drede. Lat. arescentibus hominibus præ timore. This in the first version is rendered, men waxinge drye for drede; and in the second, for men schulen wexe drye for drede. Other examples may be found at Gen. viii. 10. xiii. 10. xiv. 15, and passim.

[x] The example is seiynge, Lat. dicens; which may be rendered, and seith, or that seith. See Gen. ii. 16. Mt. i. 20, 24, and numberless other places.

[y] As qui currit may be translated and he renneth. See Gen. iii. 6. qui comedit, 1 v. the which ete, 2 v. and he eet; xxvii. 25. quos cum oblatos comedisset, 1 v. The which offryd wban he hadde eet, 2 v. And whanne Isaac hadde ete these metis brou3t; Mt. xiii. 11. qui respondens ait, 1 v. The whiche answerynge seith, 2 v. And he answeride and seide.

may be repeated in the translation as often as the sense allows and perspicuity may require[z]. Fifthly, the word autem, or vero, may stand for forsothe, or but, or even and[a]. Sixthly, when literal translation is impossible, by reason of the different position of the words in Latin and English, the relative and antecedent may be interchanged, and the order otherwise required by the English idiom adopted[b]. Lastly, he notices the difficulty of translating equivocal words, and instances after Jerome, the word ex, as signifying sometimes of, sometimes by, and the word enim, as sometimes standing for forsothe, and also for cause thus, forwhi[c]; and likewise instances the word secundum, as being commonly rendered after, but signifying by or up[d]. All these particulars very exactly agree with the version, of which the New Testament was printed by Lewis and by Baber as Wycliffe's, and leave no doubt that that version is the one which the author of the General Prologue claims as his own[e].

37. The date of the later version is determined by that of the General Prologue. This last Lewis places, though not without some doubt and reserve, soon after 1395[f]. He is induced to come to this conclusion, in consequence of the references which the prologue makes to several passing or recent events. These events are, as Lewis interprets them, 1. The revival in 1387 of an old statute at Oxford, requiring that every one taking a degree in divinity, should first have passed through arts; 2. The contests there between the northern and southern scholars in 1388 and 1389; and, 3. The conclusions said to have been exhibited by the Lollards to the Parliament of 1395.

Date of the Prologue fixed by Lewis after 1395.

38. Mr. Baber adopts the same date, and finds in support of it another argument in the mention which the prologue makes of Parisience[g]. Understanding by this name Jean Charlier of Gerson, born in 1363, he conceives that his authority could not have been alleged during Wycliffe's lifetime, nor for some years after his death[h]. But not to urge that Gerson could scarcely have been cited under the name of Parisiensis, even so early as 1395 or 1396, it is almost certain that the person meant in the General Prologue is William of Auvergne, bishop of Paris from 1228 to 1240, whose writings are frequently quoted by the Wycliffites[i].

Mr. Baber's argument for the same date untenable.

[z] Examples of this are, Gen. xxiv. 10. bonis ejus, 1 v. the goodis of hym, 2 v. the goodis of his lord; Lev. xiii. 3. arbitrium ejus, 1 v. dom of hym, 2 v. doom of the preest; Jer. li. 37. in tumulos, habitatio, 1 v. mynde hepis, the dwelling, 2 v. biriels, it schal be the dwellyng; 1 Macc. xi. 53. et vexabat, 1 v. and traueilide, 2 v. and Demetrie trauelide; Rom. xi. 16. et massa, 1 v. the hool gobet, 2 v. the hool gobet is hooli.

[a] Autem is in the 1 v. translated forsothe, in the 2 v. but, at Lev. iv. 43; Is. xiv. 19; Rom. vi. 17; 1 Cor. xi. 3, 5. In the 1 v. forsothe, or sothely, and in the 2 v. and, at Mt. iv. 22; v. 1; viii. 5, 21, 22, etc. In the Old Testament autem and vero are almost always translated in the 1 v. forsothe, or sothely; and very frequently so in the 2 v.; at other times in the 2 v. but. In the New Testament they are generally rendered in the 1 v. by forsothe, or sothely, in the 2 v. always but, or and, or they are not rendered at all.

[b] The example given is from 1 Kings ii. 10, The aduersaries of the Lord shulen drede him, instead of, The Lord hise aduersaries shulen drede. Lat. Dominum formidabunt adversarii ejus. In 1 v. this is rendered, The Lord shulen dredc the aduersaries of him; in 2 v. Aduersaries of the Lord schulen drede him. See Gen. iii. 8. abscondit se Adam, et uxor ejus, 1 v. Adam hid him, and his wijf, 2 v. Adam and his wijf hidden hem, etc.

[c] See Gen. iii. 5. 1 v. forsothe, 2 v. forwhi.

[d] Secundum is at Gen. i. 24. in 1 v. aftir, in 2 v. by.

[e] This General Prologue appears to have been printed three times; 1. in 1536, by John Gough, under the title of The dore of holy Scripture; 2. in 1540, by the same printer, and under the same title. In the preface of the printer the following passage occurs, "This originall, wherout as I have penned thys lytell codicill, is a very auntyent thynge, and, as my simple judgement can esteme it, to be wryten more then two hondred yeares past, very hard and difficile for any man to read now lyuynge, and to make therof ful sentence; the which auncient old wrytinge is the prologue of the fyrste translatoure of the byble out of Latyn into Englyshe." 3. in 1550, by Robert Crowley, with the title, The pathway to perfect knowledge. Crowley printed from a Ms. then in the king's chamber, which is now preserved in the Univ. Libr. Cambr. Mm. 2. 15. See Ames Typ. Antiq. ed. Herbert, vol. i. pp. 492, seqq.

Mr. Baber was misled by the printed copy of the prologue, ed. 1550, in which the name of Gerson is introduced by the editor. A like mistake is made in the earlier editions of Thomas Walden's Doctrinale. So also Dr. Vaughan is betrayed into the same error, in speaking of the Ecclesiæ Regimen. Life of W. vol. ii. p. 396.

[i] He is twice quoted under the name Parisience, in the Ecclesiæ Regimen, Ms. Cott. Titus D. 1. fol. 62^b,

Mr. Lewis's arguments not convincing.

39. As to the first of the arguments alleged by Lewis, it may be remarked, that the impediment to students for a degree in divinity is spoken of in the prologue as a measure newly attempted, and not yet established in practice[k]. Such language could scarcely have been used after 1395, of a regulation revived in 1387[l], even if it had been enforced during the interval. But there is no proof, that the attempts to put the statute in force were made before the commencement of 1388, and the continuance of them was strictly prohibited by the King's letters of the 17th March, and again, by those of the 1st of August of that year[m]. The expression, sleeinge of quyke men, upon which Lewis builds his second argument, may indeed, and probably does, refer to the fray which took place at the end of April 1388, when several students were killed[n]; but even in this case, the passage is far from proving so late a date as Lewis desires. The remaining argument, drawn from the allusion to the last parliament, and its cognizance of depravities prevalent in the University, seems to have greater weight. But the terms used imply specific charges or proceedings, rather than such a general allegation of the evils arising from vows of chastity as the third of the Lollard conclusions exhibits[o]. Imputations of this nature were, no doubt, frequent among those opposed to the celibacy of the clergy, and might very probably have been brought under the notice of parliament previously to 1395[p].

1388 a more probable date than 1396.

40. After careful consideration of the passages cited in favour of the date of 1396, it is impossible to affirm that they are sufficient to establish it; on the contrary, they rather concur in pointing out the summer of 1388 as the time when the prologue was composed. This view is confirmed by other circumstances. In August, 1387, a mandate was issued by the bishop of Worcester, prohibiting Nicholas Hereford, John Ashton, or Aston, John Purvey, John Parker, and Robert Swynderby from preaching in his diocese; and mentioning them as leagued together in a certain college unlicensed and disallowed by law[q]. Purvey is said to have preached at Bristol in that diocese[r]; and from the prologue it is evident[s] that the version of the Old Testament was prepared at a distance from the University, at some place where it was not easy to obtain the use of many books, and also that several persons assisted in its correction[t].

[u] A John Pyrvey received letters dimissory from bishop Bokyngham on the 13 March 1377. He is designated in the register as of Lathebury, a village near Olney, in Buckinghamshire[1]. This might possibly be the same individual. Purvey lived with Wycliffe in his later years, and after his death preached at Bristol[2]. A mandate of the bishop, dat. Aug. 1387, forbids him to preach in that diocese[3], and his books are among those which the bishops of Worcester, Salisbury, and Hereford were authorised to seize, 29 May, 1388, and 18 Jan. and 16 Dec. 1389. In 1390 he is said to have written while in prison a comment on the Apocalypse, compiled from lectures delivered by Wycliffe[4]. Previously to 1396 he must have attained to some note as an author, since from a Ms. dated in that year Foxe drew Purvey's opinions collected by his opponent Richard Lavingham as heretical or erroneous[5]. In 1400 he made a recantation at St. Paul's Cross[6]. On the 11 Aug. 1401, he was admitted on the presentation of the archdeacon of Canterbury, to the vicarage of Westhithe in Kent[7], which he resigned on the 8 Oct. 1403[8]. He is said to have been a second time imprisoned under archbishop Chicheley in 1421[9]. His death death of Wycliffe, which principally led Dr. Waterland to attribute to him the revised version of the Scriptures; but he was confirmed in his opinion by a volume in Trinity College, Dublin[v], which, containing the New Testament and also the General Prologue, bears the name of Purvey as its former possessor. This circumstance seemed to connect Purvey both with the General Prologue and with the translation in which this copy of the New Testament is written; being the same which Dr. Waterland had already[vv], upon other grounds, erroneously surmised to be Purvey's, and the later version, but which, as it has been already shewn, is undoubtedly the earlier.

supposing the author of the later version to be Purvey.

42. The present editors, upon carefully examining the volume in Trinity College Library, found that though the New Testament and the General Prologue had both belonged to Purvey, and had probably been in his time parts of the same volume, the two had no necessary connexion, and were originally distinct Mss.; they also observed, that while the books of the New Testament were in the earlier version, the prologues or arguments to these books, as well as certain parts supplied by a second scribe, were in the later; and they further discovered, that these prologues were in the handwriting of Purvey himself. These facts seem sufficient to point out the version which Purvey preferred, and with which, supposing the General Prologue to be of his composition, he identified himself.

The evidence afforded by the Ms. in Trinity Coll. Dublin.

43. That the General Prologue is by Purvey, is capable however of more certain demonstration. There is exstant a remarkable treatise[w], commonly designated, Ecclesiæ Regimen, or Thirty-seven Articles against Corruptions in the Church, written, as it seems, before 1395[x]. This treatise must have been compiled by the same author as the General Prologue. The style, language, arguments, manner of quotation, and authorities quoted in the two, have a resemblance so close, as not to admit of any doubt upon the point[y].

The General Prologue and the Ecclesiæ Regimen by the same author.

could not have taken place before 1427, as in that year Henry Beaufort was raised to the cardinalate, and on a memorial from the curate of Chedingfold to the cardinal, found in the Trinity coll. Dublin Ms. A. 1. 10. Purvey's writing occurs. Thomas Walden speaks of him as a follower of Wycliffe, magnus authoritate, doctor eximius, and quotes his book, De compendiis scripturarum, paternarum doctrinarum et canonum; and further states that he himself had a copy of it, taken from Purvey when he was put in prison, and that it comprised three chapters. Doctrinale, tom. i. coll. 619, 637. ed. [x] The twelve Conclusions presented to Parliament, about the 18th of Richard II. (if dependance can be placed on the date in the title, in the Fasc. Zizanior. Ms. Bodl. e Mus. 86.) and printed by Lewis, (Life of W. ed. 1820. p. 337,) appear to be drawn, at least in part, by the same hand with the Ecclesiæ Regimen; (See Conclusions, p. 337, last line, and Titus D. 1. foll. 24, and 42.) and if so, this last is no doubt the other book treating of the same matters more at large, and in the language of the people, to which reference is made at the end of the Conclusions. (See Conclusions, p. 343.)

[y] The following are examples:—

This proces of Paralypomynon.. schulde stire cristene kingis and lordis to.. make Goddis lawe to be Cristene kinges and temporal lordis shulden teche here meyne and sugetis the comaundementis of God.... knowe and kept of her puple..and thou3 kingis and lordis knewen neuere more of hooly Scripture than.. the storie of king Josaphat, the storie of king Ezechie, and the storie of king Josie, thei mi3te lerne sufficiently.. king Josaphat sente..to ech citee of his rewme..to teche opinly Goddis lawe to the puple.—Josie prechide opinly Goddis lawe in the temple to al the puple. *Gen. So it is ouir greet foli, whanne oure cristene britheren liggen in the depe dich of orrible synne, for brekinge of Goddis heestis and in poynt of drenchinge into helle, to suffre him ligge stille therinne, and renne to a worldli bisshop, enemy of Cristis lawe and of cristene soulis, to axe him licence to saue here soulis bi Goddis word. But it is most woodnesse to prestis, to preche not Goddis word, sith Crist and his seyntis and comoun lawe byndith hem therto, for a worldli bisshop forbedith it.—Therfore ech prest do truli his office enioynid of God, and with charitable entent, thouȝ a worldli bisshop grucche aȝens him, and thouȝ deth of bodi sue therfore. Ibid. fol. 53[b].

Omnis vero presbiter sanctus vel sacerdos Dei veraciter est episcopus et prælatus atque curatus fidelium. Confession of Purvey.

Sumtyme ago the same was prest which and bisshop, that is, prest and bisshop was al oon..therfore as prestis witen, that bi the custum of the chirche thei ben suget to him that is here souereyn, so knowe hisshopis, that more bi custum than bi the truthe of Goddis ordenaunce, thei ben grettere than prestis. Titus, D. 1. fol. 80[b].

If the bisshop of Rome, or ony othir Antecrist, make a decretal, other constitucioun, contrarie to this part in endullynge the regalie and power of seculer lordis foundid in holi Scripture, holi doctouris and quik reesoun, alle cristene men, and souereynli alle feithful lige men to oure king, owen to despise it, as venym disturblinge holi chirche. Ibid. fol. 15[b]; see also fol. 43.

Innocentius papa tertius, et sexcenti episcopi, cum aliis mille prælatis et toto residuo cleri, qui cum eodem papa determinaverunt concorditer in concilio Lugdun. quod in sacramento altaris..accidens eorundem panis et vini remanent ibidem, sine aliquo subjecto proprio eorundem..omnes illi fuerunt in hoc stulti et fatui, heretici et blasphemi, ac seductores populi Christiani; quare non est credendum determinationibus eorundem..nisi fundentur in sacra scriptura expresse vel ratione cui non poterit obviari. Confession of Purvey.

Cristene men ben not holden for to bileue that ech determinacioun of the chirche of Rome is trewe on ech side. Titus, D. 1. fol. 39.

A! how suspect semeth the determinacioun of Innocent the thridde with the multitude of fleschli prelatis, othir of religioun, the possessioneris of beggeris en-collected out of his writings by his opponent Lavenham, and printed by Foxe[a]. A full and accurate comparison of these documents on the one hand, and the Ecclesiæ Regimen on the other, cannot fail to produce complete conviction[b], that Purvey was the ducyng him herto, that the sacrament of the auteer is an accident withouten suget .. bi what presumpcioun bryngith in this synful man this nouelrie, not foundid opinli in the lawe of God, neither in resoun? Ibid. fol. 41b.

[a] The following are instances:—

Such as be true Christians receive none such as priests, uuless .. neither doe they beleeue that thei make the sacrament of the altar, when it pleaseth them .. And therfore such as be symple men will worship that sacrament in this doubtfulness with a silent condition, that is, if it be made by God's authority, and to haue their devotion to the body of Christ in heaven. Foxe, vol. i. p. 501. col. 2.

Therfore if oni man haue doute of conscience, that this euil man makith not the sacrament .. lat him worshipe the sacrament with a stille condition, and in as moche as it were duli maad, and lat him reste bi verri feith in the veri bodi of Crist that.. now is glorified in heuenis. Titus, D. 1. fol. 67.

Innocentius the third .. after the letting loose of Satan invented .. that the sacrament of the altar is an accident without a substance .. is very and substantial bread and no fals nor fained bread. Foxe, vol. i. p. 501. col. 2.

.. so this sacrament is verri breed, not feynid neither fals .. Thanne if Innocent the thridde .. aftir the vnbyndynge of Satanas, affermen that this worshipeful sacrament is an accident without suget. Titus, D. 1. fol. 23b.

That chapter Omnis utriusque sexus, by which a certaine new found auricular confession was ordained is full of hypocrisie, heresie, couetousness, pride and blasphemy, he saith and reproueth the same chapter verbatim, .. whereby the priests do oppresse the simple laymen, .. compelling them to confesse themselves to blinde and ignorant preests, .. having such in contempt as are learned and wise. Foxe, vol. i. col. 500.

.. and in the decretal Omnis utriusque sexus de penitenciis et remissionibus, he maketh a perlous statute a3en the olde decre put on Austyn, and a3ens kyndeli resoun and profyt of cristene soulis.. and if for the blyndnesse of the preest, or for othir vnahlete, he that is repentaunt wole go to another preest kunnynge in this gostli office, he shal not do this withouten licence axid. Titus, D. 1. fol. 42b.

All christian kings and lords ought to exclaime against the pope and those that be his fautors, and banisch them out of their londs, till such time as they will obey God and his gospell, kings and other ministers of God's justice. Foxe, vol. i. p. 502. col. 2.

.. the king and seculer lordis han power and autorite to punshe what euere persoone trespassinge opinli in here londis, thou3 he be bisshop or erchebisshop, 3ea and the bisshop of Rome. Titus, D. 1. fol. 15.

If ony suche constitucions be founde, kinges and seculer lordis shulden make tho to be don awei, and prisone other exile the auctouris and fautouris of tho. Ibid. fol. 16.

[b] It should be observed, that the passages from Scripture recited in the Ecclesiæ Regimen, for the most part agree very closely with the later version, indeed so closely, that they must have been taken from it, though not with scrupulous accuracy. Compare, for instance:—

Exod. xviii. 21. Purveie thou of al the puple my3ti men and dredinge God, in whiche is truthe, and haten auarice; and ordeyne thou of hem tribunis, that is, souereyns of a thousand, and centurions, that is, souereyns of an hundrid, and souereyns of fifti, and souereyns of ten, that shulen deme the puple in ech tyme. Titus, D. 1. fol. 57b.

Numb. xi. 16, 17. The Lord seide to Moises, Gadere thou to me lxx. men of the eldere men of Israel, whiche thou knowist that thei ben the olde men and maistris of the puple; and thou shalt lede hem to the dore of the tabernacle, and thou shalt make hem to stonde there with thee, that I come doun and speke with thee, and that I take awei of thi spiryt and 3eue to hem, and that thei susteyne with thee the birthene of the puple, and not thou aloone be greuid. Ibid.

Deut. i. 12, 13, 15—17. Moises seide to the puple, I aloone mai not susteine 3oure bisinessis and wei3te and stryuis; 3eue 3e of 3ou wise men and prudent, whos conuersacioun is preuid in 3oure linagis, that I sette hem princis to 3ou .. And I took of 3oure linagis wise men and noble, and I ordeinide hem princis and tribunis and centuriens and quinquagenaries and deenis, that shulden teche 3ou alle thingis. And I comaundide to hem and seide, Here 3e hem, and deme 3e that that is iust, whethir he be a citeseyn, othir a pilgrym no difference of persoone shal be; 3e shulen here to a litil man as a greet man, neither 3e shulen take the persoone of ooni man, for it is the doom of God. Ibid. fol. 58.

Ps. ii. 10, 11. And now, kinges, vndirstonde 3e; be 3e lernid that demen the erthe. Serue 3e to the Lord in drede, and make 3e ful out ioie to him with tremblinge. Ibid. fol. 15.

Is. i. 15. Whanne 3e shulen holde forth 3oure hondis, I shal turne awei myne eeris fro 3ou; and whanne 3e shulen multiplie preieris, I shal not here; for whi 3oure hondis ben ful of blood, that is, 3oure werkis ben ful of synnis. Ibid. fol. 10.

1 Pet. ii. 11. Derwortheste britheren, I biseke 3ou as comelinges and pilgrimis, that 3e absteine 3ou fro fleshli desiris that fi3ten a3ens the soule, and haue 3e 3oure good conuersacioun among hethene men, that in that that thei bacbiten of 3ou, as of euil doeris, thei biholde 3ou of gode werkis, and glorifie God in the dai of visitacioun. Ibid. fol. 57.

Lastly, the author of the Ecclesiæ Regimen thus quotes:—"And God seith in the xviij. c°. and xxxiij. c°. of Ezechiel, bi oon translacioun, 'In what euere hour a synnere is inwardli soori, he shal be saaf.' And the same sentence is in oure translacioun, in the xxxiij. c°. (v. 12), that hath thus, 'The wickidnesse of a wicked man shal not anoie him, in what euere dai he shal be conuertid fro his wickednesse;' and in the xviij. c°. (v. 21.) thus, 'If a wickid man doth penaunce for alle his synnis whiche he wrou3te, and kepith alle myne heestis, and doth doom and ri3tfulnesse, he shal lyue by lif, and shal not die. I shal not haue mynde of alle the wickidnessis of him, whiche he wrou3te.'" Titus, D. 1. fol. 10b. These passages, as quoted from oure translacioun, agree closely with the later version; but the passage first quoted does not agree at all with the earlier version. Mr. Lewis supposes two translations into English to be meant, and understands by oure author of that treatise. And it may therefore be regarded as undeniable, that Purvey was also the author of the General Prologue, and consequently of the later version of the Bible, to which it belongs.

By whom Purvey was assisted, not certain.

45. It is impossible now to ascertain to whom Purvey alludes[c], as aiding him in the preparation of this version. William Thorpe, in the narrative of his examination before archbishop Arundel in 1407[d], mentions John Ashton, Philip Repingdon, Nicholas Hereford, Dan Jeffrey Pickeringe, and John Purvey, with many others which were holden right wise men and prudent, as those who were diligent in teaching and writing the doctrine of Wycliffe. Repingdon seems to have deserted the Lollard party at an early period; the others mentioned, and perhaps Thorpe himself, may possibly have contributed some assistance to the completion of the design. But, if the suggestion which has been already made regarding the date and place of the version be well founded, it becomes highly probable that Purvey's principal associates were the persons specified in the bishop of Worcester's mandate, namely, Hereford, Ashton[e], Parker and Swynderby[f].

The Old Testament put forth first.

46. The General Prologue was evidently designed as a preface to the Old Testament only, and not to the New. Of this last it makes no mention, except in a single sentence of the first chapter. It is also worthy of remark, that the prologue was written before the author had completed his intended gloss on the minor prophets[g]; and it bears other marks of having been finished in haste[h]. It may, perhaps, be no unreasonable conjecture, that the Old Testament was put forth by itself, and before the New was revised; which last required less alteration in order to make it conform with the views of the author of the prologue. He might have intended to prefix a similar prologue to the New Testament, and have been prevented by the opposition and persecution he had to encounter, from carrying his intention into effect, as he appears to have been in his purpose of glossing the minor prophets. The enlarged prologues to the several books of the New Testament, presently to be noticed[i], strengthen this supposition.

Character of the later version.

47. The version put forth by Purvey, whether made for the Old and New Testaments at the same or at different times, followed in all essential points the same general plan. It is every where founded upon the previous translation, and, in the later books of the Old Testament which were not rendered by Hereford, and in those of the New, it is often little more than a mere revision of the former text, presenting but few substantial differences of interpretation. The principles upon which Purvey proceeded have been already specified, so far as they are given by himself. They were designed to render the version more correct[j], intelligible and popular; and it translacioun that usually but erroneously ascribed to Wycliffe. Hist. of Translations of the Bible, ed. 1818. p. 39.

[e] See particulars of him in Lewis's Life of Wiclife, p. 262.

[f] He is called in the mandate of the bishop of Worcester Robert; but it seems probable that this is a mistake, and that he is the same person as William Swynderby, of whom an account is given in Lewis, p. 271. See also Pat. 15, Ric. II. p. 2. m. 20.

[g] See Gen. Prol. p. 41.

[h] It ends abruptly. Chapters xii.—xv. are unskilfully connected with what precedes. And the prologue to the prophetical books set at the beginning of Isaiah, should rather have formed part of the General Prologue, particularly as a large part of it is repeated in the beginning of chap. xii.

[i] See p. xxx.

[j] The following are a few among many instances, in which the translator has amended the interpretation, where it was, or was supposed to be, defective or erroneous:—Gen. ix. 13. 1 v. the signe of couenaunt of pees shal be, 2 v. and it shal be a signe of boond of pees. Exod. xxix. 2. 1 v. puyr whete meele, 2 v. whete flour. Deut. xxxii. 2. 1 v. cornes, 2 v. gras. Deut. xxxiii. 7. 1 v. fiȝt for it and helper of it he shal be, 2 v. fiȝte for hym, and the helpere of hym shal be. Josh. v. 15. 1 v. felie redi, 2 v. felde lowe. Josh. vi. 25. 1 v. curside, 2 v. preiede hertli. Job x. 1. 1 v. me, 2 v. my soule. Ibid. 1 v. to my soule, 2 v. of my soule. Job xi. 12. 1 v. asse, 2 v. wilde asse. Job xiv. 12. 1 v. to the time that he be totreden, heuene shal not wake out, 2 v. til heuene be broken, that is, be maad newe, he schal not wake. Mt. xii. 5. 1 v. grete synne, 2 v. blame. Mt. xiii. 52. 1 v. wryter, 2 v. wise man of lawe. 1 Cor. iii. 13. 1 v. for manifestly becomes more easy and familiar as the translator advances[k]. There is one remarkable distinction between the Old and New Testaments, that in the first he has inserted numerous textual glosses, only occasionally omitting those of the earlier version, whereas in the New Testament he has made no such insertions, and carefully excluded all the glosses which it previously contained.

Prologues of Jerome omitted in the Old Testament.

48. The Old Testament, in the greater number of copies of the later version, omits the prologues of Jerome, and it seems as if Purvey had supposed his own general preface to be a sufficient substitute for them. In the Lincoln College Ms. 15, this preface is broken up into portions, which are severally prefixed to the books to which they belong. In all the copies there is prefixed to Isaiah a prologue by Purvey upon the prophetical books, and to Baruch the short argument found also in the copies of the earlier versions.

Except in a few copies.

49. A few Mss., forming an exception to the general rule, require to be specially noticed. First, to speak of O (New Coll. 66), F (Sion Coll. 18), and X (Hereford 206). In all three the epistle of Jerome to Paulinus is given before Genesis, and divided, not into eight, as in the other version, but into nine chapters. The epistle to Desiderius is correctly made a separate prologue, with a rubric prefixed. The prologues to Joshua, I Kings, I and II Paralipomenon, I Esdras, Tobit, Judith, Esther, the two to Job, and the two to the Psalms, are found only in O; of these the three first mentioned are alone intitled to be considered a new translation, the others being mere transcripts from the earlier version, with some very slight alterations. In the Ms. K (Bodl. Fairfax 2), the prologues are in the earlier version, with the exception of those to Isaiah and Baruch. The Ms. R (Univ. Libr. Cambr. Dd. 1. 27) which has the two prologues to Job and the two to the Psalter in the earlier version, has, in a version of its own, the prologue to Wisdom, and likewise the Greek translator's prologue to Ecclesiasticus. In the Ms. T (Trin. Coll. Dubl. A. 1. 10), formerly belonging to Purvey, containing the New Testament and the General Prologue, are found the prologues to the Psalter in a revise of the earlier version[l]. The Ms. M (Queen's Coll. 23) is peculiar in having a short prologue of its own prefixed to each of the books from Exodus to Ecclesiasticus, and also to Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, and the I Maccabees. The same prologues upon Ezekiel and Daniel are also found in the Ms. R.

Prologues in the New Testament.

50. In the New Testament, Matthew has the prologue, with some inconsiderable variations introduced, which is found in many Mss. and editions of the Vulgate, and begins, Matthæus cum primo. The prologues to Mark and Luke are abridgments of those in the earlier version. John has the same prologue as in that version, but more freely rendered, and with the last sentence omitted. The epistles of Paul have the short arguments found in the earlier version, but with variations implying the use of a different Latin original[m]. The Catholic Epistles here, as in the earlier version, have the epistle of Jerome to Eustochium. Lastly, to the Apocalypse is prefixed the prologue frequently found in Latin Mss. and attributed to Gilbert of Poitiers[n].

ech mannis work schal be schewid in fyer, what maner it is; the fier schal proue, 2 v. for it schal be schewid in fier; the fier schal preue the werk of ech man, what maner werk it is. 1 Cor. iii. 15. 1 v. it schal suffre peyringe, 2 v. he schal suffre harm.

[k] In connexion with this observation it may be noticed, that the words forsothe and sothli, which are of such repeated occurrence in the earlier version, (see Dr. Waterland's Works, vol. x. p. 354) are frequently retained in the former half of the Old Testament; are less common in the latter half, and are scarcely to be met with in the New Testament.

[m] To the Romans is likewise prefixed in several Mss. which for the most part appear to be of a later date, the special prologue noticed when speaking of that epistle in the earlier version, p. xvi. n. These Mss. are, k, l, m, n, o, p, q and r. A different and somewhat more recent translation of the same prologue is found in a single copy, Ms. Brit. Mus. Addl. 11,858, from which it has been printed, vol. iv. p. 308.

Additional prologues in certain copies.

51. Two or three copies of this version occur, in which prologues, subsequently compiled, seem to have been added to the books of the New Testament, and which demand some remark. The first to be noticed belongs to the library of Emanuel College, Cambridge. This Ms.[o], besides the prologues and arguments found in the ordinary copies, has generally a second prologue prefixed to each book. The exceptions which occur are, the epistle to the Romans, which has only the special prologue mentioned above, and the short argument, the second epistle to the Thessalonians, the first epistle of Peter, and the second and third of John, which have no preface of any kind. In the greater part of these prologues the matter is taken, more or less, from the ordinary gloss, or from that of Lyra. The style is that of Purvey, and it scarcely admits of doubt that they are from his pen[p]. The additional prologue in Matthew, or, as it is more correctly called, the addition to the ordinary prologue on that evangelist, appears as if it did not belong to the same series; and it is remarkable, that it is found in the same form in two other Mss.[q] The second copy to be noticed is one which in the year 1731 belonged to Thomas Granger, of Milk Street, London. It is not known where it is now deposited. Ames states that it was written in the year 1424[r], and he transcribed from it a series of additional prologues to the books of the New Testament[s]. These prologues partly, as in the epistle to the Hebrews, and in the first of Peter, are not found in any other Ms.; partly, as in most of St. Paul's epistles, are enlarged from those in the Emanuel College Ms.; and in one or two instances, as in the first epistle of John and in the Apocalypse, are nearly identical with them. The epistle to the Romans has only the special prologue and the short argument; the second and third epistles of John and the epistle of Jude have no prologue. A third copy belonging to sir Peregrine Acland, Bart., is singular in having prefixed to the Galatians, after the usual short argument, no less than three prologues[t], the first of which agrees partially with that in the Emanuel College Ms.; the two others have not been found in any other copy.

Marginal Glosses.

52. In two passages of the General Prologue Purvey alludes to his glosses on the Old Testament. In the first[u] he states, that he had explained the greater prophets and in part the lesser prophets, and that he intended shortly to complete his gloss on the latter[w]. In the second passage[x] he informs us, that where, according to Jerome, Lyra, and other expositors, the Hebrew differed from the Latin, he had set in the margin, by way of a gloss, what the Hebrew had[y], and sometimes how it was to be understood[z], and this chiefly in the Psalter. These marginal glosses, which are absent from all copies of the earlier version, are found in those of the later. They occur however to a far greater extent in one or two Mss., than in the generality. They are most numerous in the Cotton Ms. Claudius E. 2 (C), and next to this, in the Old Royal Ms. 1 C. 9 (B). The glosses on the Psalms have been found only in the Bodl. Ms. 2326[a]. The marginal glosses on certain parts of the New Testament,

Table of Lessons.

53. The table of lessons, epistles and gospels, annexed to copies of the earlier version was revised and enlarged, and the quotations were adapted to the new translation. It is found inserted in several Mss.[c]

Uniformity of copies of the later version.

54. The copies of this later version present so great an uniformity, that their peculiarities scarcely admit of an observation. E, L, and P frequently agree together in differing from the other copies, but their variations are not of an important character. They consist, for the most part, in the substitution of an equivalent particle, or of a relative for a conjunction, or the expression of a word understood. K (Fairfax 2) has several short marginal glosses not found elsewhere; and, in the New Testament, k (Lansd. 455) has peculiar textual readings, but many of these last arise from errors either of the first or of the correcting scribe.

Attempts to revise the version.

55. Within a few years after the completion of the later version some imperfect attempts appear to have been made to revise it. One of these revised copies is preserved in a Ms. of the Bodleian Library, which formerly belonged to king Henry the Sixth[d]. The revisor seems, as he proceeded, to have grown weary, or to have become dissatisfied with the result of his labours, and he gave up his plan, after having advanced into the Psalter; the alterations made in the subsequent parts being comparatively few and unimportant. His object was to render the version more plain and intelligible, which he endeavoured to accomplish by introducing numerous explanatory phrases[e], substituting nouns for pronouns, and antecedents for relatives[f], supplying words understood in the original[g], changing expressions to those more familiar and modern[h], and using connective particles, either more simple than those of the later version or in addition to them[i]. In making these alterations he seems scarcely to have consulted the Latin, from which he sometimes unwarrantably departs, but he has frequently had recourse to the earlier version, and adopts its expressions[k]. This revised text is followed in several parts by a Ms. in the library of Corp. Ch. Coll., Cambridge[l]. In the books from Joshua to IV Kings inclusive, and after the book of Job, this last mentioned copy agrees with the usual text, but elsewhere it adopts many of the variations of the Bodleian Ms, sometimes, however, rejecting them for readings of its own. In these readings it proceeds upon the same principle, interpolating numerous paraphrastic and explanatory words. It is singular, that from the beginning of the II Paralipomenon to the fifth chapter of the II Esdras the Ms. belonging to the library of St. John's College, Oxford[m], generally coincides with one or both of the before-mentioned copies.

III Esdras found in a single copy.

56. The third book of Esdras had formed part of the early version, but was rejected by Purvey as devoid of authority in matters of faith[n]. Accordingly it had no place in the copies of the second version. But the Bodleian Ms. 277, containing the revised text just described, gives it in a translation of its own[o]. This is founded upon the early version, and formed upon the same principle which guided the writer in preparing other parts of his revision. The order is conformed to the English idiom, textual glosses are introduced, and many explanatory words are supplied. The revisor does not appear to have translated from the Latin, bnt merely to have recast the early version, so far as he thought it necessary, in order to render it uniform with the preceding part of his Ms.

Epistle to the Laodiceans.

57. The epistle to the Laodiceans was excluded as spurious both by Wycliffe and Purvey. Subsequently, however, it was translated together with its argument, and is found in several Mss. of the later version, none of which appears to have been written early in the fifteenth century[p]. Another, but nearly coeval, version of the same epistle occurs in a single copy[q].

Table of Matters.

58. Several copies of the later version contain a table of matters, or summary of the contents of the chapters in the several books of the New Testament[r]. These summaries differ in different Mss.; in some being much more full than in others[s]. A summary of the contents of the whole Bible, of a like kind, is written by way of running titles to the several chapters, in the upper margin of the Bodl. Ms. Fairfax 2; which has also a table of contents to the New Testament, affixed at the end of the Apocalypse.

Copies of the new version rapidly multiplied.

59. The Bible thus completed by Purvey caused the earlier translation to fall into disuse. The new version was eagerly sought after, and read. Copies passed into the hands of all classes of the people[t]. Even the sovereign himself and the princes of the blood royal did not disdain to possess them. The volumes were in many instances executed in a costly manner, and were usually written upon vellum by experienced scribes. This implies not merely the value which was set upon the word of God, but also that the scribes found a reward for their labours among the wealthier part of the community. The multiplication of copies must have been rapid. Nearly one hundred and fifty Mss. containing the whole or parts of Purvey's Bible, the majority of which were written within the space of forty years from its being finished, have been examined for the present edition. Others are known to have existed within the last century; and more, there can be no doubt, have escaped inquiry; how many have perished it is impossible to calculate. But when it is remembered that from the first the most active and powerful measures[t] were take to suppress the version,—that strict inquisition was made for the writings and translations of Wycliffe, Hereford, Ashton and Purvey,—that they were burnt and destroyed as most noxious and pernicious productions of heretical depravity,—and that all who were known to possess them were exposed to severe persecution[u];—and then if there be taken into account the number of Mss. which in the course of four or five centuries have been destroyed through accident or negligence, it is not too much to suppose that we have now but a small portion of those which were originally written.

Effects of the version.

60. The effect of this circulation of Scripture among the people in their own tongue was just what might have been expected. Men reading with their own eyes the words of the Saviour and of his apostles, found a marked contrast between the principles which they inculcated and many parts of the system upheld by the Romish church. Which of the two should be rejected could not be matter of hesitation. The progress of religious truth met however with serious impediments. These chiefly arose from two sources; the extravagances into which some of those who embraced

[t] These measures were of various kinds. Wycliffe in his Treatise against the orders of Friars, chap. 36, writes, "and thus they pursue priests, for they reprove their sins as God bids, both to brenne them and the Gospel of Crist, written in English to most learning of our nation." Vaughan's Tracts and Tr. p. 247. The commissions issued to seize the books written by Wycliffe, Hereford, Ashton and Purvey have been mentioned before p. xxiv. Knighton, speaking of the visitation of Leicester by archbishop Courtney in 1392, and of Will. Smyth, then compelled to do penance in the market-place there, tells us, "Libros eciam solempnes, quos in materna lingua de evangelio et de epistolis et aliis epistolis et doctoribus conscripserat, et ut fatebatur, per annos octo studiose conscribere laboraverat, archiepiscopo coactus tradidit." col. 2736. In 1390 a bill, if we may credit the Compendious treatise presently to be noticed, was brought into the house of lords for the suppression of the English translation; which was however thrown out by the exertions of the duke of Lancaster. The translation was opposed in the schools, and among others by Will. Butler, a Franciscan, whose Determination against it, written in 1400, is still exstant, but imperfect, in the library of Merton College (No. 68, p. 202). In 1408, at a convocation in Oxford, archbishop Arundel published a constitution forbidding the reading of any book of Scripture translated into English, composed lately in the time of John Wycliffe or since his death. (Wilkins Conc. tom. iii. p. 317.) The Wycliffites on their part were not backward to defend their right to have the Scriptures in their own language. The series of tracts in a volume in the Univ. Libr. Cambridge has been already largely quoted. Between the years 1398 and 1405, during which period archbishop Scrope held the see of York, was probably composed a treatise in Latin of considerable extent, on the lawfulness of having the Scriptures in the vernacular tongue. The third and most important division of this work is preserved in the Imperial Library at Vienna, in a Ms. of the fifteenth cent. (See Denis Codd. Theol. Lat. Bibl. Vienn. vol. i. p. 3. col. 842 seqq.) The author is anonymous, but apparently a theologian of Oxford, where he tells us, two valentes doctores successively disputed in public lectures on either side of the question. He repeats the arguments used on the negative side, adding some of his own, and then replies on the affirmative. Shortly after this, in the time of archbishop Arundel, and therefore compiled between 1399 and 1414, appeared a treatise in defence of the vernacular version of Scripture, in which some of the passages in the Latin tract mentioned above are introduced. No more than a fragment of this treatise is preserved in its original form, and this only in manuscripts of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. Three of these are found in Mss. Harl. 325, Cott. Vitell. D. 7, and C.C.C. Cambr. 171, all made from a fragment in Worcester Cathedral; a fourth transcript is among the Lambeth Mss. No. 594. fol. 57, made by Wharton from a Ms. formerly in the library of Westminster Abbey. The entire treatise in a somewhat modernised form, and with interpolations, (as for instance, the notice of bishop Fleming's death in 1431,) was printed, probably at Tindal's instigation, by Hans Luft, at Marlborow in the land of Hessen, in 1530; and reprinted in England by Richard Banckes, under the title of A Compendyous olde treatyse, shewynge howe that we ought to haue the Scripture in Englyshe, (see Dibdin's Ames, vol. iii. p. 257;) in the preface to which edition it is described as "a treatyse wryten about the 3ere of our Lorde a thousande fower hundred." It was introduced by Foxe into the first edition of his Actes and Monuments, 1563, p. 452 seqq., but omitted in the subsequent impressions. It is to this treatise that archbishops Parker and Ussher, as well as Foxe, were indebted for their notices of archbishop Arundel's sermon on queen Anne, and of the bill in parliament brought in by the archbishops and clergy alluded to above.

the new opinions speedily fell, and the wars and distractions from which England suffered during the greater part of the fifteenth century. Notwithstanding these obstacles truth maintained its own cause. The versions of Wycliffe and his followers continued to be read and circulated; they contributed largely to the religious knowledge which prevailed at the commencement of the Reformation; and at that period they supplied an example and a model to those excellent men, who in like manner devoted themselves at the hazard of their lives to the translation of Scripture, and to its publication among the people of the land.

Sources of the texts now printed.

61. Little now remains, except to give an account of the method which the editors have pursued in preparing these volumes for the press. The texts have been printed from the Mss. with scrupulous exactness. For this purpose, four copies have been selected in the earlier version, namely, a Ms. in the library of Corpus Christi Coll. Oxford, marked No. 4, two Mss. in the Douce collection, Bodleian Library, Nos. 370 and 369, and a Ms. in the Old Royal collection, British Museum, marked 1 B. 6. The text has been collated either verbatim or in various readings with nineteen other copies. These have been, with little exception, examined throughout their extent. In addition, eight copies have been collated for prologues and smaller portions.

In the earlier version.

In the later version.

62. For the later text, one manuscript has been followed throughout, marked 1 C. 8, in the Old Royal collection. This has been collated either verbatim, or in the various readings with no less than thirty-four other copies. The greater part of these have been examined throughout. Thirteen more have been consulted for prologues and portions. The two printed editions of the New Testament in the later text, by Lewis[w] and Bagster, have likewise been collated throughout, in the various readings.

In the General Prologue etc.

63. In the General Prologue the text is printed from the Harl. Ms. 1666, as far as chap. xv. vol. i. p. 57, l. 3, and thence to the end from a Ms. in the Cambridge University Library, Mm. 2. 15. An accurate collation has been made of eight other copies. The epistles of Jerome prefixed to Genesis are taken, in the later version, from the New College Ms, 66; elsewhere the source of the prologues, if it differ from that of the book which follows, is noted in the margin. For the table of lessons etc. the text has been copied from the Mss. Corp. Ch. Coll. No. 4, and Brit. Mus, Addl. 15,580, except it be otherwise stated in the margin, and has been collated with six other copies[x].

64. The great extent to which the collations have been carried, will be more fully and accurately perceived by means of the subjoined table, which will also explain the letters by which the several copies are designated.

IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

Earlier Version.

A. Corp. Ch. Coll. Oxford, 4; forms the text from Genesis to III Kings, and from Ezekiel i. 26 to xxxii. 23; collated verbatim elsewhere. [94.[y]]

B. Bodl. Libr. Douce 370; forms the text from IV Kings to II Paralipomenon; collated verbatim elsewhere. [88.]

C. Bodl. Douce 369, 1st. part; forms the text from I Esdras to Baruch iii. 20; collated verbatim elsewhere. [87.]

[w] As reprinted by Mr. Baber, 4°. Lond. 1810.

[x] Namely, Brit. Mus. 1 B. vi. (M); Arundel 104 (E); Queen's Coll. Oxf. 23 (M); Univ. Libr. Cambr. Dd. 1. 27 (R); Hereford 206 (X); and Lansdowne 455 (k). The quotations of the beginning and end of the respective lessons do not precisely agree in the different Mss., being sometimes taken from the earlier version, and sometimes from the later, and occasionally varying slightly from both. It has not been thought necessary to note these variations.

[y] The numbers here affixed designate the order in which these Mss. are described in the list subjoined to this Preface.

In the Table of Lessons, etc., the references to the collations are the same as in the New Testament.

65. The glossary has involved no inconsiderable labour. It has been compiled principally with the view of explaining such words as seemed likely to occasion difficulty to an ordinary reader. Few such, it is hoped, have escaped notice. But it must be observed, that neither the glossary nor the various readings include all the orthographical variations which the manuscripts present. This would indeed have been an useless and almost endless task. The principal forms and inflexions have, however, been set down, and the philologist will find the glossary highly serviceable in enabling him to ascertain the usage of words at a definite period of our language, employed by those whose purpose it must have been to make themselves as easily understood as possible. It is right to warn him, that some of the examples given may not belong to either of the original versions, but be derived either from the partial revisions of the text subsequently undertaken, or from the caprice of the copyists of particular Mss. But these are exceptional cases, and of rare occurrence; the great bulk of the words collected in the glossary may be confidently assigned to the last twenty years of the fourteenth century. Glossary.

Acknowledgments due from the Editors.

66. The editors in the course of their protracted undertaking have laid themselves under many obligations. First of all, their thanks are due to the Delegates of the University Press in Oxford, for the liberal patronage which, by providing for the expense of the work, encouraged them to commence their task, and has enabled them at length to bring it to a conclusion. They have also to express their acknowledgments to the Royal Society of Literature, who at the outset of the design, zealously, though ineffectually, exerted their influence to promote its success. For the loan of valuable Mss. the editors are widely indebted. They have particularly to mention the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, the Warden and Fellows of New College, the Provost and Fellows of Queen's College, the Rector and Fellows of Lincoln College, and the Presidents and Fellows of Corpus Christi and St. John's Colleges respectively, all in Oxford; the Masters and Fellows of the several Colleges of Caius, Emanuel, Trinity, Sidney, Magdalen and Christ's, in Cambridge; the Deans and Chapters of Hereford and of Lincoln; the Corporation of the city of Norwich; the President and Fellows of Sion College; the Trustees of Archbishop Tenison's Library; the Provost and Fellows of Trinity College, Dublin; the Faculty of Advocates in Edinburgh; H. R. H. the late Duke of Sussex; His Grace the late Archbishop of Canterbury; Mrs. Allanson of Broughton; Sir Peregrine Acland, Bart.; Sir Thomas Phillipps, Bart.; Sir David Dundas, H. M. Judge Advocate; the very Rev. the Dean of Llandaff; the late Francis Douce, Esq.; Thomas Banister, Esq. of the Inner Temple, and the Rev. Daniel Rock, D.D.

During the long period in which the editors have been engaged on their work, they have had to visit, or to consult, very many of the principal Libraries of the kingdom. Every where they have met with the most ready and obliging attention. But they are bound to acknowledge more especially the kindness of His Grace the present Archbishop of Canterbury, in granting them free access to the manuscripts and archiepiscopal registers at Lambeth. They are also particularly indebted to the Bishop of Lincoln, to the late Master and to several of the Fellows of Corpus Christi College, to the Master of Magdalen College, and the late and present Masters of Emanuel College, in Cambridge; to the Masters of University and Balliol Colleges, the late President of Corpus Christi College, and the Principal of St. Mary Hall, in Oxford; to the Rev. Dr. Bandinel, Librarian of the Bodleian Library, and the Rev. H. O. Coxe, Sub-librarian there; the Rev. John Lodge, and the Rev. Thomas Power, late and present keepers of the University Library in Cambridge; the Rev. Professor Lee, the Rev. Charles Blick, of St. John's College, and the Rev. W. P. Baily, of Clare Hall, in that University; to the Rev. Dr. Todd, senior Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin; Professor Couper, Curator of the Hunterian Museum in Glasgow; David Laing, Esq. Keeper of the Signet Library, Edinburgh; the Rev. Wm. Gunner, Fellow of Winchester College; the Rev. W. G. Anderson, senior Tutor of University College, Durham; and Dr. C. P. C. Schönemann, Librarian of the Ducal Library at Wolfenbuttel.

Conclusion.

67. The editors have spared no pains to render these volumes complete. A considerable portion of their time during twenty-two years has been spent in accomplishing their task. They will have no cause of regret, if the result of their labours shall remove some portion of the disgrace which has long been attached to the English nation, for the continued neglect of its earliest versions of holy Scripture, and if it shall serve in any important degree to illustrate the history and structure of the English language.

LIST OF MANUSCRIPTS.

BRITISH MUSEUM.

1. Old Royal Library. 1 A. IV. Thin vellum, 12°., ff. 269, 2 cols., written about the middle of XV. cent.; probably No. 103 of the Theyer collection purchased by Charles II. in 1678.

   The New Testament, with the usual prologues, in the later version. Prefixed is a Table of the lessons, epistles and gospels, after the use of Salisbury.

2. Old R. L. 1 A. X. Vellum, small 4°., ff. 238, 2 cols., of the early part of XV. cent.; formerly belonged to Lord Lumley.

   The New Testament, with the usual prologues, in the later version. A Table of the lessons, etc. after the use of Salisbury, is prefixed.

3. Old R. L. 1 A. XII. Vellum, 4°., ff. 241, 2 cols., written about the middle of XV. cent.; presented as a new year's gift to Queen Elizabeth, by her chaplain, John Bridges, who has written a dedication to her majesty on two spare leaves at the commencement.

   The New Testament, with the usual prologues, in the later version. Prefixed is a Table of the lessons, etc.

4. Old R. L. 1 B. VI. Vellum, large 4°., ff. 239, 2 cols., in an upright large character, written with great care and neatness, about 1400. It appears to have belonged in 1569 to Avery Uvedall, in 1576 to Edmund Hasselwode, and in 1580 to Nicholas Crafford, and still earlier to Edwy Marowe. The volume was one of the Theyer collection, probably No. 171.

   The books of the New Testament, with the usual prologues, in the earlier version. They are preceded by a Table of lessons, etc. according to the use of Salisbury. The following lacunæ occur, Mt. vii. 11 to viii. 19, and Mk. iii. 33 to iv. 37. to the end of the Apocalypse.

5. Old R. L. 1 B. IX. Paper, small folio, ff. 54, written apparently in the reign of Queen Elizabeth; previously in the Theyer collection, No. 180. It contains:—

   1. The prologue to the Gospel of St. John, in Anglo-Saxon, fol. 1;—2. The 'Capitula,' or an abstract of the contents, of St. John's Gospel, in Anglo-Saxon, fol. 1;—3. "Legenda de defunctis," in Anglo-Saxon, fol. 2;—4. "Legenda in quadragesima," in Anglo-Saxon, fol. 2 b;—5. The Gospel of St. John, in the later Wycliffite version, with the same Gospel in Anglo-Saxon, on alternate pages, fol. 4 b.

6. Old R. L. 1 C. VIII. Vellum, large folio, ff. 572, 2 cols., very neatly and regularly written, probably before 1420, with initials to the books, in gold upon coloured grounds, and to the chapters blue flourished with red; and having ornamented borders at the commencement of some of the books: prefixed to John is a small miniature, representing the evangelist and the eagle. The first leaf has been inserted subsequently, and has been written by a later scribe. The recto of this leaf has a red rose in the initial letter, and is surrounded by a border partly composed of red and white roses; in the lower part is a shield of France and England, quarterly, and on the side a portcullis surmounted by a red rose; executed in the reign of Henry VII. This Ms. has been carefully corrected throughout by a nearly contemporary hand.

   The books of the Old and New Testament, in the later version, with the prologues to Baruch and Isaiah, and those usually prefixed to the books of the New Testament. The Ms. presents in the most material points an uniform and accurate text. In many places, when other copies combine, not unfrequently without exception, in adopting an erroneous reading, here the correct rendering is given; examples of this are found in Gen. xxxi. 35 and 41, so for lo; xxxiv. 24, and for whanne sec.m.; xxxviii. 29, for for fro sec.m.; xliv. 30, the for this; xlix. 11, grape for grace sec.m.; Josh. ii. 19, oure for ȝoure sec.m.; v. 13, aduersaries for aduersarie sec.m.; ix. 18, princis for puples sec.m.; xxii. 15, of for to; Judg. vii. 3, the for that; viii. 9, and so for and; ix. 17, to for for sec.m.; xi. 33, til to thou comest for til to that he come; 1 Kings xviii. 7, pleiynge sec.m. for fleyng; II Kings vii. 20, for for therfor sec.m.; Ezek. xiii. 21, hond for lond sec.m.; Mk. xiii. 8, begynnyngis for beginning, and 1 Cor. vii. 9, that for and. In some of these cases the reading seems, not to have been selected from another Ms., but rather to have been the rendering of the scribe himself, after an examination of the Latin; as for example, in Judg. ix. 18, handmayde for concubyne; 1 Kings xxi. 11, queeris for carroulis; Eph. iii. 4, mysterie for mynysterie. These corrections of the ordinary text are very frequently due to the second hand, which has throughout made numerous emendations, as Gen. xxxvii. 28, thriȝtti for twenti; Judg. x. 9, passid Jordan for passid; 1 Kings xxvii. 12, he wrouȝte for we wrouȝten. Variations also from the generality of copies are sometimes found in the adoption of a more modern or familiar word, as Gen. l. 6, chargid for coniurid; Judg. iv. 15, a foote for on foote; 1 Par. ii. 31, sotheli for certes; a for o; and a for sum when singular; sometimes in the insertion or repetition of a pronoun, to render the sense more clear, as Josh. xiii. 12, hem; Judg. x. 7, he; IV Kings vii. 17, her; and sometimes, with the same view, in the supplying a relative and auxiliary, as Josh. x. 6, that weren before bisegid; or the addition of man or men to an adjective, as Gen. xxxix. 20, bounden men. It has again other peculiarities, as the omission of the s in the genitive; Lk. xv. 17, fadir for fadris; of ȝe after the imp. plural, Ex. v. 11. Mt. xiii. 32. Rom. xvi. 9; of to after certain verbs, as brynge, comaunde, etc., and the almost uniform putting of whether for wher. In the New Testament, it seems as if the old version had been consulted, giving occasion to such readings as Mt. xiv. 5, groyneden for grucheden; and Mt. xv. 27, crucifien for crucifieden; Lk. i. 15, and for ne; vi. 1, bi cornes for bi the cornes. But one of the most remarkable variations occurs in the discarding of the verbal glosses from the text, which as far as Numb. xx. are almost always omitted; from this place to the Psalms they are adopted, and from the Psalms to the end of the Old Testament are again rejected. Sometimes however an explanatory gloss is admitted where other copies are without it, as Gen. xxxv. 14, title ether memorial; 1 Kings v. 8, wise men ether princis; 1 Macc. v. 64, prosperite ether preisyngis. This Ms. has formed the text of the later version throughout the present edition of the books both of the Old and New Testament.

7. Old R. L. 1 C. IX. Vellum, folio, ff. 233, 2 cols., written not later than 1410. Previously in the Theyer collection, No. 27. Another portion of this copy is contained in Ms. Harl. 5017.

The books of the Old Testament, from Genesis to Job inclusive, without prologues, but with numerous marginal glosses by the original hand, especially in Job; these generally agree verbatim with those printed from Ms. Cott. Claud. E. II. A few, but not of much extent, are found, which do not occur there. In the margin are also written some remarks in a hand of the time of Henry VIII.

8. Old R. L. 17 A. XXVI. Vellum, small 4°., pp. 281, written by two hands; the first portion, extending as far as p. 206, is the earlier, but both are probably before 1400; it was No. 270 of the Theyer collection. The volume contains:—

An exposition of the Decalogue, p. 1.—A tract of the seven deadly sins, and other short pieces of a like kind, p. 37.—Wycliffe's Commentary on the Apocalypse, with the prologue, p. 67.—This Gospel of St. John, with the prologue, in the early version, p. 209.—This Ms. has some readings peculiar to itself.

9. Cotton, Claudius, E. II. Vellum, large folio, 2 cols., ff. 352, written probably before 1420; imperfect at the beginning. A leaf has been prefixed inserted from some other Ms. which contained a History of the Bible in French.

The books of the Old and New Testament, in the later version, with the usual prologues, and large marginal glosses, chiefly from Lyra, many of which are found only in this copy. It also originally contained the General Prologue, as is evident from the list of books of Scripture given at the end of the volume; but this has been taken out, as well as the first chapters of Genesis, the Ms. now beginning at chap. ix. 23. It is also defective from II Macc. vii. 10 to the end of the Old Testament. The scribe has made numerous mistakes, which have been corrected by a second contemporary hand. The lessons are marked by letters in the margin, and in the New Testament there are frequent references to parallel passages. A few remarks have also been made in Latin and English by hands of about the year 1500. It is a remarkable circumstance, that the earlier text is introduced into this copy, by the original hand, from Luke xix. 12 to xx. 10, and throughout the Epistle to Philemon.

10. Harl. 272. Vellum, 4°., ff. 155, 2 cols., written about 1420. Probably it was formerly in Sir Simonds d'Ewes' collection, No. 104.

The New Testament, with the usual prologues, of the later version. At the end occur some Remarks on the Apocalypse, and Comments on the Commandments; with other extracts of a like nature. On the first leaf is prefixed, by rather a later hand, a copy of a prayer engraved in the church of St. John Lateran at Rome, granting 80,000 years of indulgence to all who should repeat it daily.

11. Harl. 327. Vellum, 4°., 2 cols., ff. 128, written about the year 1410. It formerly belonged to Sir Simonds d'Ewes, No. 118.

The Epistles of St. Paul, the Acts, Catholic Epistles and Apocalypse, in the later version, with the usual prologues.

12. Harl. 940. Vellum, in very small 4°. or 16°., written in the first half of the fifteenth century, ff. 187; it formerly belonged to Edmond Pirton, Esq., and in Sept. 1645 to Roger Warfilde, by the gift of William Pyrton, Esq.

The Epistles of St. Paul, with the usual prologues; the Acts, Catholic Epistles and Apocalypse, all without prologues; in the later version. It begins with Rom. vii. 24, and ends in Apoc. xxii. 12; the remaining verses of the chapter are however written on the next fly-leaf, in a hand of the XVI. cent.

13. Harl. 984. Vellum, in small 4°., ff. 73, written probably before 1450; the lacunæ have been partially supplied in the sixteenth century; imperfect both at the beginning and the end;

on the first leaf is written "Thomas Lower," and on the reverse, "4 of Oct. 1662, bought of Mr. Jones in litle britton."

The Gospel of St. Matthew, in the later version; beginning with the concluding lines of the prologue, and ending in c. xxviii. 16. The parts supplied are iv. 19—v. 13; xxiv. 15—30; xxvi. 41—55.

14. Harl. 1212. Vellum, in 4°. ff. 285, written about 1420. It belonged towards the close of the XVII. century to Mr. Richard Smith, of the Poultry Compter, and afterwards to Major John Mould, of whom it was purchased by Lord Oxford.

The New Testament, with the usual prologues, in the later version. Prefixed is a Table of the lessons, etc. after the use of Salisbury, and at the end is transcribed, in the hand of Mr. Smith, the Epistle to the Laodiceans, which is not complete.

15. Harl. 1666. Vellum, small 4°., ff. 111, written in the earlier part of the XV. century; imperfect at the end. It belonged to Archbishop Parker, and subsequently to Mr. Agarde of London, and when in his possession furnished the extracts in Ms. James No. 3, in the Bodleian Library. It was afterwards No. 90 of Henry Worsley's collection, and is wrongly described in the Catalogi librorum Mss. Angliæ, fol. 1697, as a copy of Wycliffe's Wicket.

The General Prologue prefixed to the Old Testament, in the later version. It ends in the XV. chapter with the words "manye other synnes and."

16. Harl. 1896. Vellum, small folio, ff. 110, written about 1450, or later; purchased by Lord Oxford of Humphrey Wanley. On the fly-leaves occurs twice the name "Henry Spelman," in a hand of the XVI. cent.

The Psalter, in Latin and English, verse by verse, the Latin in red letters; the English in the more recent version. —The following Canticles in like manner, in Latin and English, 1. Confitebor; 2. Ego dixi; 3. Exultavit; 4. Cantemus Domino; 5. Domine, audivi; 6. Audite, celi; 7. Benedicite; 8. Te Deum; 9. Magnificat; 10. Benedictus; 11. Nunc dimittis; 12. Quicunque vult.

17. Harl. 2249. Vellum, small folio, ff. 173, 2 cols., written perhaps about 1420; in the margin of fol. 83^{b} occurs the name "Robert Yate;" defective at both extremes, written by the same hand as the Addl. Ms. 11,858, and it may have originally formed part of the same volume.

The books of the Old Testament from Joshua to Psalms inclusive, in the more recent version. It begins in Joshua xix. 19, and ends in Psalm cxliv. 14.

18. Harl. 2309. Vellum, in small 4°., ff. 107, 2 cols., written about 1420; bought by Lord Oxford of Mr. Bagford; it previously, in the sixteenth century, belonged to one Richard Dychar.

The four Gospels in the later version, with the usual prologues. It is defective from Mt. i. 20 to viii. 26, and from John xx. 28.

19. Harl. 3903. Thin vellum, 8°., ff. 64, written about the middle of the XV. century. At the end of Job, in a hand apparently of the original scribe, "The priis of this book is vj. s. and viij. d."

The books of Job and Tobit, in the later version.

20. Harl. 4027. Vellum, in large 4°., ff. 186, 2 cols.; written probably as early as 1420; much stained in parts, and a leaf is wanting in the iv. and v. chapters of Acts. In 1678 it belonged to Thomas Penson, Esq.

The books of the New Testament, in the later version, with the usual prologues. At the end is added a Table of the epistles and gospels for the Sundays and ferials of the whole year, in Latin; and, after two blank pages, a similar Table for the Saints' days.

21. Harl. 4890. In thin folio, vellum, ff. 93, 2 cols., written about 1420.

The New Testament, in the later version, with the usual prologues. Prefixed is a Table of the lessons, etc., after the use of Salisbury.

22. Harl. 5017. Stout vellum, large folio, 2 cols., ff. 117, written by the same hand with Old R. L. 1 C. IX. of which copy it originally formed a part. On the fly leaf, in a hand of about the year 1720, is the name "Rob. Keck."

The books of Maccabees, and those of the New Testament in the later version; the New Testament has the usual prologues. The margin contains numerous glosses, chiefly from Lyra, many of which have been found in no other Ms., and the greater part only in this, and in Ms. New Coll. Oxford, No. 67. This is the copy from which, when in the possession of Robert Keck, Esq. of the Inner Temple, the Rev. John Russell proposed to print the New Testament of his intended edition.

23. Harl. 5767. Vellum, in 16°., ff. 113, 2 cols, written after 1450; presented to Lord Oxford by Mr. Oldisworth.

The Gospels of St. Luke and St. John, with the usual prologues, in the later version.

24. Harl. 5768. On thin vellum, in 16°., ff. 84, written before the middle of the xv. century. It belonged in the xvii. century to Abraham Olney, by whom it was given to William Eyres, who bestowed it on Richard Gipps.

The Catholic Epistles and the Apocalypse; without prologues, rubrics or titles.

25. Harl. 6333. Vellum, thick 4°., 2 cols., ff. 365, written about 1430; in 1581 it belonged to Henry Flycke. It contains:—

1. "A reule that tellith in whiche chapitres of the bible ȝe may fynde the lessouns, pistlis and gospels, that ben red in the chirche after the vsse of Salisburi." fol. 1.—2. "A prolog upon the gospel of Mathew," taken out of Wycliffe's prologue to his Commentary on Matthew; beg. "Seynt Austyn seith"; (printed from this Ms. Gen. Prol. p. 44; and also privately by the Rev. Dr. J. T. Barrett, from a Ms. belonging afterwards to H.R.H. the Duke of Sussex). fol. 18.—3. Another "prolog," beg. "Oure lord Jhesu Crist—mekenes and pacience and charite," (printed also by Dr. Barrett, in whose Ms. some few lines are added beyond those found in this copy.) fol. 20.—4. The usual prologues to the four Gospels, in the later version. fol. 21 b.—5. Wycliffe's translation of Clement of Lanthony's Monotessaron, with its prologue, and table of contents. fol. 23.—6. A Kalendar, with the Epistles and Gospels for Saints' days marked in it. fol. 139.—7. The longer prologue to the Epistle to the Romans. fol. 145.—8. The Epistles of St. Paul, the Acts, Catholic Epistles, and the Apocalypse, in the later version, with the usual prologues. fol. 147.—9. The Epistle to the Laodiceans, with a prologue. fol. 297.—10. Certain gospels read in the church, which are not to be found in Clement of Lanthony's Monotessaron in any one place; these are in the later version. fol. 297 b.—11. "The lessouns and pistlis of the oolde lawe, that ben red in the chirche in al the ȝeer, after the vss of Salisbiri," and "othere lessouns of the oolde lawe, that ben not red after the vsse of Salisburi"; these lessons agree partly with the old, and partly with the recent version. fol. 307.—12. A list of the books of the Bible, including the Epistle to the Laodiceans, with the chapters comprised in each. fol. 364.

26. Lansdowne 407. Paper and vellum intermixed, small folio, 2 cols., ff. 135, written after 1450. The following names occur, John Jackson; Alderman Dane, Frydaie Streete; and Thomas Turnere.

The New Testament, with the usual prologues, in the later version. It is defective in the Apocalypse, from i. 1. to vi. 6, and from xii. 2, to the end. At the commencement of the volume is, 1. A Table of the lessons, etc.; 2. A short harmony of the Gospels, in Latin; and 3. A Table of the principal commentators on each book of Scripture; also in Latin.

27. Lansdowne 454. Vellum, large folio, 2 cols., written perhaps about 1420; on one of the fly leaves at the commencement is the following note, "This old copy of Wiccleve's Bible I purchased out of the Library of Sir Joseph Jekyl. It formerly belonged to Lord Somers. This is the finest copy I ever knew exposed to sale. James West, February 27, 1738–9." On the recto of the last leaf, in Roman capitals, in a hand of the xvii. century, ELSBETH. R. And a little below, within a scroll, the initials E. R. From the Ms. catalogue of Lord Somers' Library (Harl. 7191), where the copy belonging to his lordship is described as Wycliffe's Bible, in 2 vols., as well as from Sir Joseph Jekyll's sale catalogue (lot 72), in which the same description is found, it would seem as if there had been at that time a second volume of this Ms.

The books of the Old Testament from Genesis to Psalms inclusive, in the later version; with a few short marginal glosses.

28. Lansdowne 455. Vellum, small folio, 2 cols., ff. 154, written not later than 1420; the last leaf supplied upon paper, at the end of the xvii. century, seemingly by Richard Smith of the Poultry Compter. It contains:—

1. A series of lessons from the Old Testament, extending from Advent to Trinity Sunday, and comprising, together with some other passages of Scripture from the same books, Is. i—ix. 8; Gen. i. ii. vi—viii. 9; xii—xv. 2; xxvii—xxx. 40; xxxviii—xli. 25; Exod. i—iii.; Jerem. i—viii. 22, and Lam. i—iii. 27; all in the later version, fol. 2.—2. "The lessouns and pistlis of the oolde lawe, that ben rad in the chirch bi al the ȝeer"; sometimes in the later, sometimes in the earlier version, and that with such irregularity, that successive lessons taken from the same chapter are in different versions. fol. 18.—3. A tract on contemplative life and the love of God, beg. "In ech synful man or woman"; the latter part in a later hand. fol. 34.—4. A tract by Richard Rolle, "of the amendinge of mannes lijf, other of reule of lyuynge," in 12 chapters. fol. 41.—5. A Kalendar, in Latin. fol. 49.—6. A table "to fynde the lessouns, pistlis and gospels, after the vss of Salisberi." fol. 50.—7. A short synopsis of the books of the Bible, and a few chronological notes. fol. 58.—8. The books of the New Testament, in the more recent version, with the usual prologues; two to the Epistle to Romans. The Ms. offers not unfrequently peculiar readings, and has been corrected throughout by a second, but nearly contemporary scribe. The supplied leaf at the end contains Apoc. xxi. 15 to the end.

29. Arundel 104. Stout vellum, in two volumes, folio, 2 cols., ff. 379 and 425; written probably in the middle of the xv. century. On the last leaf is this note, "Henricus Saville, filius Henrici Saville de Blatheroide et Franciscæ vxoris ejus, natus fuit die Veneris, videlecit, vicesimo die mensis Octobris, in hora quinta post meridiem ejusdem diei, in anno Domini millesimo quingenticesimo (sic) sexagesimo octauo; et die dominica tunc proxima sequen' baptisatus fuit in ecclesia parochiali de Hallifaxie, Johanne Lacyi de Brearley et Thoma Savile de Copley armigeris existen' compatribus eius, ac etiam Margareta Waterhous, vxore Gregorii Waterhous, vna filiarum Nicholai Tempest, armigeri existen' comatræ (sic) illius." On the blank verso facing St. Matthew's Gospel is pasted a finely illuminated capital B, cut out from a Psalter of the early part of the XIV. century; and on the side margin is painted a shield, with the arms of England, surmounted by a coronet or crown, executed probably in the XVI. century. Other capitals, apparently from the same Psalter, have been pasted upon the margins of the Psalms, one of which still remains. The initial letter to St. Matthew, which contains a winged figure symbolically representing the four Evangelists, is in a better style than the other ornaments.

The books of the Old and New Testament, in the later version. The Ms. has prologues to Isaiah and Jeremiah, and to the books of the New Testament, where commonly found. It is defective from Gen. xlii. 11, to xliv. 25; 1 Paral. xvi. 39, to xviii. 10. Its readings have a singular and almost uniform accordance with those of Bodl. 296, and Eman. Coll. I. 1. 6. Prefixed is a Table to find the lessons, etc. at mass; and subjoined is a list of the books of the New Testament.

30. Arundel 254 (formerly 245). Vellum, 8°., ff. 135, written probably about 1400; defective at the end. It contains:—

1. A list of the books of Scripture, in Latin, imperfect. fol. 1.—2. Wycliffe's Translation of Clement of Lanthony's Harmony, or Monotessaron, with the usual prologue, and the two prologues printed by Dr. Barrett, the former of which has in this Ms. an additional paragraph at the commencement, beg. "In the beginning of holy chirche it was forbodyn that eny man schulde speke—as oen of the puple;" and the latter has been printed from this Ms. in the preceding Preface, p. xiv.; also a Table of the gospels read in the church throughout the year, adapted to the Monotessaron. fol. 2.—3. The Catholic Epistles, with the prologue, in the earlier version. fol. 86 b.—4. The lessons from the Old Testament, after the use of Salisbury, in the earlier version, imperfect, ending with the epistle on St. Matthew's eve. fol. 104.

31. Burney 30. Very small 4°., vellum, pp. 208; contains three Mss.; written probably in the middle of the XV. century. It formerly belonged to John Price, rector of Orleston and vicar of Halling, 1719—1730; afterwards to the Rev. John Brand.

The Gospel of St. John, in the later version; the Epistle to the Hebrews, in the same version.

32. Egerton 617, 618. Vellum, 2 vols., which originally formed only one, in large folio, 2 cols., written about 1420; at the top of the second leaf, inserted in the border, are the arms of Humphrey, duke of Gloucester, viz. quarterly, France semée and England, surrounded by a bordure argent; which arms are erroneously stated by Dr. Adam Clarke to belong to Thomas of Woodstock. The Ms. was purchased by Dr. Clarke at the sale of Dr. Fell, in 1795, and previously, according to Dr. Clarke, it belonged to Dr. J. Hunter.

The books of the Old Testament from Proverbs to II Macc., and those of the New Testament, in the early version, with the usual prologues where they are inserted; blank spaces being frequently left for them. Rubrics of the church lessons are inserted in the text of the New Testament. It is defective from 1 Cor. i. 1 to iii. 9; from Titus i. 1 to iii. 13, and from 1 Joh. v. 9 to Jude 3. Prefixed is a table of the books contained in the Ms.; and at the end, a "Kalendere to knowe alle the gospels and pistlis of the ȝeer, whan thei ben radde after Salysburye vse." In the part of the Kalendar called the proper sanctorum, are introduced some remarks directed against the application of the lessons to the saints of the Romish church.

33. Egerton 1165. Vellum, small 4°., ff. 274, 2 cols., written about 1430. It is defective in many places; the name John Harefinch, and date 1708, occur in several parts.

The New Testament, with the usual prologues, in the later version. Prefixed is a Table of the lessons, etc. after the use of Salisbury. And at the end of the volume, a large Table of the matters in the several chapters of each book, which is imperfect, ending in cap. xii. of the Apocalypse.

34. Egerton 1171. Thin vellum, 12°., 2 cols., ff. 356, written about 1430. It belonged to Mr. Heber, who bought it at Singer's sale in 1818, lot 345; it previously was the property of Jackson, 1794, lot 325; then of Edwards, the bookseller, at whose sale in 1815 it was sold to Mr. Singer, lot 819; and in 1728 it belonged to David Jennings, who bought it of Mr. Boote of Wantage. Before this it was in the possession of Hen. Jeffreys, who purchased it from Mr. Atkins of Worcester. It contains:—

1. A Kalendar.—2. A Table of lessons, epistles and gospels, "aftir the vss of Salisberi."—3. The books of the New Testament, in the later version, with the usual prologues.—Then 4. in a rather larger, but contemporary hand, "the lessouns and pistlis of the olde lawe, that ben rad in the chirche in al the ȝeer, after the vss of Salisburi."—To which are annexed, 5. "Othere lessouns of the Olde Testament, that ben not rad after the vss of Salisburi." All in the later version.

35. Additional 5890—5902. Thirteen 4°. volumes, containing the transcript of the Old and New Testament, in the later Wycliffite version, made by or under the direction of the Rev. John Russell, Fellow of Merton College, for his projected edition, of which he printed a prospectus, dated August 1, 1719.

Prefixed to vol. I. (5890) is the following title, "The Holi Byble, translated into English by John Wickliff, S.T.P., about the year 1380; carefully copied from different Mss. in Oxford, afterwards collated with the Mss. in the King's and Cotton Libraries, by John Casley. Finally transcribed for the press under the direction of John Russell of Merton College, Oxford, 1721."—This is followed by the rough draft of a few paragraphs of an intended Preface, and by five pages of the General Prologue, taken from the Bodl. Ms. 277; after which is a copy of the Kalendar, or Rule of the Lessons, etc. from the Queen's Coll. Ms. 23, collated with the Corpus Coll. Ms. 1471.—Then follows the text of the Old Testament, transcribed from the Lincoln Coll. Ms., which extends through Mss. 5890—5899 inclusive, with occasional readings in the margin from Mss. St. John's, Oxford, Queen's, and Cotton Claud. E II., in the books of Genesis, Exodus and Leviticus; and also with the marginal glosses of Lyra, transcribed from the last-mentioned Ms. as far as the book of Daniel. In Ms. 5895 the III Esdras is added from Bodl. 277. Some of the books, as Joshua—III Kings, and part of I Macc., are compared with the Vulgate and the English authorised version, and the readings noticed, with a very few critical notes.—In Mss. 5900 and 5901 is the transcript of the New Testament with some of the usual prologues, taken from Ms. Harl. 5017, and the Epistle to the Laodiceans, from Ms. Lambeth 369.—Throughout the early chapters of Matthew are some critical notes, founded on a comparison with the Greek, the Vulgate, and the authorised version, which shew the plan on which it was intended to edit the work, but they are of little value. The marginal glosses are given from Harl. 5017.—After the Apocalypse, there follow in 5901:—1. Wycliffe's Commentary on the Apocalypse, with the prologue, apparently from a Ms. in Norwich Library, fol. 251.—2. Proverbs, etc. from the Old Testament, fol. 315.—3. Prophecy of St. Hildegarde, fol. 324.—4. "The seuene wordes that Crist spake on the crosse," fol. 326^{b}.—5. "The ten comaundementis," with a short comment, fol. 327^{b}.—6. Seven four-line stanzas, beg. "God that alle myghtes may, in heuen and erthe thi wille is don," fol. 329^{b}. And in Ms. 5902, 7. Translation of the Athanasian Creed, with a comment, copied from Bodl. Arch. 100 and collated with Bodl. Th. W. 3, 5, and Arch. B. 96, fol. 1.—8. Appointment of John de Wyclyue to be Custos of, Cant. Hall, 5 id. Dec. 1365, from archbishop Islip's register, fol. 35.—9. "Protestatio Rev^{di}. Doctoris," beg. "Protestor publice, nt sepe alias," transcribed from Ms. Selden Arch. B. 10, fol. 38.—10. Portions of the transcript of the Old and New Testament, fol. 46.—11. A computation of the expense of printing the intended edition, fol. 105^{b}.

36. Additional 10,046. Vellum, in 16°., ff. 132, 2 cols., written about the year 1430. It contains the book-plate of Joseph Ames of Norfolk (lot 826 of his sale). It afterwards belonged to the Whiteknights' collection, from which it was purchased (lot 2813) by Mr. Heber.

It commences with this rubric, Here bigynneth a prologe on the Salmes of the Sauter, beg. "Greet abundaunce —— loue of enemyes" (corresponding verbatim with that printed vol. i. pp. 39, 40, except that the paragraph "This book comprehendith —— loue of enemyes" is placed last instead of first); then the rubric, Ende prologe. Then follows the commencement of chap. xii. of the General Prologue, p. 43, "But it is to wite —— in heuene." The book of Psalms, in the later version, with titles and the first verse of the Latin. The canticles, 1. Confitebor; Ego dixi; Exultavit; Cantemus Domino; Domine, audivi; Audite, celi; all in the later version: 2. Benedicite, abbreviated and in a different version, with the Gloria Patri and a versicle at the end; 3. Te Deum, beg. "Thee, God, we preise; thee, Lord, we knowleche. Thee, endelees fadir, euery erthe worschipeth"; 4. Magnificat, printed by Lewis from this Ms. in Hist. of Translations, p. 34; 5. Benedictus and Nunc dimittis, in a different version from either of those now printed; 6. Quicunque vult, with an exposition, beg. "It is seid comunli that ther ben thre credis," and ending, "teche it to men vndir hem."

37. Additional 10,047. Vellum, in small 4°., ff. 149, written late in the xv. century. The name "William Thorold" occurs, in a hand apparently of the xvii. cent.: at a recent period it belonged to John Towneley of Corney-house, Chiswick (lot 868 in his sale), and afterwards to Mr. Heber.

The Psalms, from the first to the seventy-third inclusive, in the later version. The first verse of each Psalm in the vulgate Latin, is given at its commencement.

38. Additional 10, 596. Vellum, small 4°., originally perhaps two Mss., both written about 1430. The latter part was written for "Matilda Hayle of Berkinge," and it afterwards belonged to Mary Hastynges of the same place. On the upper margin of the first leaf, "Iste liber pertinet Johanni Prston (?) 1577."

The first contains a book called "The crafte of deyinge," fol. 1. The second contains—1. The book of Tobit, in the later version, fol. 25; 2. Magnificat and Benedictus, both in the later version, fol. 47, 6; 3. Meditations and prayers, fol. 49; 4. The history of Susanna, in the later version, fol. 77.

39. Additional 11, 858. Vellum, small folio, ff. 118, 2 cols., written in an upright character, perhaps about 1420. It is by the same hand with the Harleian Ms. 2249, and originally may have formed part of the same volume. The initials are not inserted. At the conclusion of the volume is this note: "Liber Gulielmi Cartheri, Rectoris Wermoth Episcopi, 1547;" and at fol. 19, in a hand of the xvi. cent., "Thomas Bate younger;" and at fol. 56^{b}, in a later writing,

"Mr. George Dynley." It subsequently belonged to Booker, Warmsley, and Haslewood, at whose sale it came into the hands of Dr. Butler bishop of Lichfield.

The books of the New Testament, in the usual order, and as far as Luke xix. 13 in the earlier version, the remainder in the later; with the usual prologues, which are all of the later version. It has the four introductory verses to Luke, printed from this Ms., which are found only in one other copy, namely, New Coll. Oxford, No. 67. The longer prologue to the Romans is in a translation found only in this Ms., and is printed, vol. iv. p. 301.

40. Additional 15, 517. Vellum, 4°., 2 cols., written about 1430. It is imperfect at the beginning and end, and has other lacunæ; it has also suffered from damp, and a leaf has been supplied in Luke, in the early part of the XVI. cent.

The four Gospels, in the later version. It begins at Mt. x. 38 and ends at John xvi. 4.

41. Additional 15, 580. Vellum, short folio, 2 cols., written before the close of the XIV. cent.

The books of the Old Testament, from Proverbs to II Maccabees, and of the New Testament throughout, with the usual prologues, in the early version. They are preceded by 1. A Table of the church lessons, etc., the quotations in which are from the early version; and 2. A list of the books in the Old and New Testament. The rubrics of the lessons are written in the margin. It is defective from Ecclesiastes IX. 11 to Song of S. viii. 1; Ecclesiasticus xxvi. 20 to xxix. 18, and from Acts xxiv. 5 to xxv. 26.

SION COLLEGE.

42. Sion Coll. $\frac{3.2}{1}$, formerly 18, (4082). Vellum, large folio, 2 cols., written about 1420. On the fly leaves are written several names in various hands of the XVI. and XVII. centuries, and on a leaf in I Esdras the name of "Oliuer Sent Jhon."

The books of the Old Testament, in the later version, with the prefatory epistles of St. Jerome to Paulinus and Desiderius, and prologues to Isaiah and Baruch. It is defective from Judith xv. 15 to Esther ii. 16; and from Job xlii. 14 to Psalm x. 2.

43. Sion Coll. $\frac{\text{xiii}}{7}$, formerly 20, (4084). Vellum, small 4°., written about the middle of the XV. cent.; on the covers are the royal arms, France and England quartered, within the garter.

The New Testament, with the epistles and lessons of the old law, as read in the church, all in the later version.

ABP. TENISON'S LIBRARY.

44. Tenison, 83. Vellum, 4°., 2 cols., written perhaps as late as 1450. It is mutilated at both extremes, and in some other parts.

The four books of Kings, the second book of Paralipomenon, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Song of Solomon, Wisdom, and Ecclesiasticus, in the later version. It commences with I Kings xxviii. 5, and ends in Ecclus. xvi. 3. It is defective from II Paral. xx. 35 to xxii. 9; from Prov. xix. 4 to Eccles. ii. 7; from Eccles. xii. 3 to Song of S. iv. 5; from Song of S. viii. 5 to Wisd. i. 8; and from Wisd. xix. 13 to Ecclus. i. 12.

WESTMINSTER.

COLLEGIATE CHURCH OF ST. PETER.

45. Westm. 85. Vellum, small 12°., written about 1450; given by the Duchess of Richmond to Henry Earl of Arundel, and by him in Sept. 1576 to Richard Wiclif. It was either 85 or 86 of the Mss. described as belonging to the Dean and Chapter, in Bernard's Catalogi Mss. Angliæ, 1697.

The New Testament, of the later version, with a Table of lessons prefixed, and with the usual prologues.

LAMBETH.

ARCHIEPISCOPAL LIBRARY.

46. Lamb. 25. Vellum, large folio, written about the year 1400. On a fly leaf is pasted a paper containing notes of the christenings of the children of "John Tey, squier, and Constans, his wief," 1543—1557, with the names of their sponsors, both at baptism and confirmation. This is probably the copy which formerly belonged to Bishop Bonner.

The books of the Old and New Testament; the Pentateuch in the earlier version, the remainder in the later version. The only prologues of the Old Testament are those prefixed to Genesis, Isaiah, and Baruch. In the latter part of the Old Testament it has numerous marginal glosses.

47. Lamb. 369. Vellum, 4°., ff. 252, 2 cols., written about 1450. In the XVI. century it belonged to Wyllyam Hoskyn.

The New Testament, in the later version, with the usual prologues, and the Epistle to the Laodiceans. At the end, the lessons, etc. of the old law, on three pages only, the volume being imperfect; these lessons are in the later version.

48. Lamb. 532. Vellum, 8°., ff. 431, 2 cols., written about 1450.

The New Testament, with the usual prologues, of the later version. Prefixed is a Table of the lessons, etc. after the use of Salisbury. After the Apocalypse, fol. 421, "The lessouns and pistlis of the olde lawe that ben rad in the chirche in al the ȝeer, aftir the vss of Salisburi," and fol. 429, "othere lessouns of the oolde lawe, that ben not rad aftir the vss of Salisburi." On the last leaf, the names of the books in the Bible, with the numbers of chapters in each.

49. Lamb. 547. Very thin vellum, 12°., 2 cols., written about 1450; imperfect at the beginning.

The Gospels and Catholic Epistles, in the later version, with the usual prologues. It begins in Mt. i. 1, wanting the prologue. After the Epistle of Jude follows "the table of the newe lawe," or "the maters of the gospels," that is, their contents; ending imperfectly in John xvii.

50. Lamb. 1033. Vellum, 4°., 2 vols., written probably about 1430; mutilated at the beginning and end, and in several other places; in parts much soiled.

The books of the Old Testament, from II Paral. ii. 7 to Baruch inclusive, in the later version, with the prologues to Isaiah and Baruch. The textual glosses are numerous and sometimes peculiar; it has also occasional glosses in the margin. On Is. ciii. 17 is a Latin note on the word gerfaucun, which supposes Wycliffe the author of the version, and terms him "Latinitatis ignarus." The note is in a hand of about 1500. The following lacunæ occur: II Paral. xx. 12 to xxi. 11; Judith iv. 13 to vi. 6; Esther i. 8 to iv. 8; Job iv. 5 to ix. 17, and xx. 14 to xxvi. 13; Ps. ix. 7 to xiii. 3, xc. 2 to ciii. 14, and cix. 5 to cxviii. 37; Prov. vi. 12 to Song of S. v. 9; Is. xlix. 20 to li. 17; Bar. iii. 23 to vi. 42; and the Ms. ends in Bar. vi. 71.

51. Lamb. 1150, 1151. Two volumes, vellum, small 4°., written about 1430. On the fly leaf of vol. i. the following memoranda: "George Hudson awe this booke"; "Tis boke was bowght of Wylliamc Mathv, sum tyme parishe clearke of Sent Dunstones in the west of Londoune, by me John Wyttone, Cetzⁿ. and brodderer, & of the same paryshe, in año dñi 1554.—The wyche boke was extemed to be at that tyme thre vnderethe olde and more." On the first folio, "Hæreditas mea providentia Dei. D. N. 25 Novembr. 1627." This Ms. was formerly Askew's, and sold at his auction in 1775, lot 321. It was presented to the Lambeth library by Edw. Jacob of Feversham, in 1786.

The New Testament, with the usual prologues, in the Latin version. Prefixed, in a different hand, is a Table of the lessons, etc. after the use of Salisbury.

OXFORD.

Bodleian Library.

52. Laud 24, formerly C. 6, (658). Vellum, 12°., written about 1450.

The Gospels of St. Matthew and St. Mark, of the later version, and with the usual prologues.

53. Laud 25, formerly C. 7, (659). Vellum, 12°., 2 cols., written about 1435.

The four Gospels, in the later version, with the usual prologues.

54. Laud 33, formerly C. 9, (661). Vellum, small 4°., written perhaps before 1400. It belonged to John Amerie, who bequeathed it to his wife Dorothy, by whom it was given in 1635, to Andrew Cook, by the hands (?) of John Wilson, of Maldon in Essex.

The Epistles of Paul and the Catholic Epistles, in the later version, followed by Wycliffe's Commentary on the Apocalypse.

55. Laud 36, formerly C. 24, (676). Vellum, 8°., written about 1430; imperfect at the beginning—wanting a leaf.

The four Gospels, in the later version, with the usual prologues, and a few marginal glosses.

56. Laud 182, formerly D. 14, (781). Vellum, small 4°., written about 1420, imperfect at the beginning.

Chapters selected from Gen., Exod., Deut., I Kings, III Kings, Job, Psalms, Dan., and II Macc.; from Mt., Mk., Lk., the whole Gospel of John, I Cor., Hebr., and Deeds, II Pet., and the Epistle of Jude, and the Apocalypse entire. Then another series of short extracts from the books both of the Old and New Testament; all apparently in the later version.

57. Laud 507, formerly E. 6, (929). Vellum, small 4°., ff. 130, written in the earlier half of the xv. cent. It once belonged to "Joseph Maynard. Coll. Exon.," and in 1574 to "Christopher Watson, Deiragirantus, ætat. suæ 29."

The Gospels of St. Matthew and St. Mark, in the later version, with the usual prologues.

58. Laud 361, formerly I. 6, (1346). Vellum, 4°., written perhaps about 1420.

The New Testament, in the later version, and with the usual prologues. At the end are the lessons and epistles of the old law, after the use of Salisbury.

59. Bodl. 183, (2084). Vellum, small folio, 2 cols., ff. 284, probably written after 1450; some leaves are torn.

A Table of the lessons, after the use of Salisbury. The books of the New Testament, with the usual prologues. Tobit, without a prologue, Judith, Esther, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Song of Songs, Wisdom, and Ecclesiasticus, all with prologues except the last. The books both in the Old and New Testament are in the later version; the prologues in the Old Testament are of the earlier version, slightly altered.

60. Bodl. 277, (2124). Vellum, in large thick folio, 2 cols., neatly written, with initials to the chapters, blue flourished with red, and to the books in colors and gold, branching into well executed borders, often of grotesque figures; perhaps of the date of 1440; on the recto of the last leaf in a hand of the commencement of the XVI. century, Hic liber erat quōdā Hērici sexti, q̄i postea donabat nr̄ domui Cartusianorū que Lōdini cōtigua est.

The books of the Old and New Testament, in the later version, but in many parts much revised. It includes the III book of Esdras, which of this version is found in this Ms. only, and is printed from it. The first chapter of the General Prologue is prefixed to Genesis. It has prologues to Isaiah and Baruch, and to the books of the New Testament, and a few short marginal glosses. The longer prologue to the Epistle to the Romans is given both in the early and the later version. The Ms. is defective from III Kings xxii. 11 to IV Kings ii. 16. The lessons are noted by rubrics in the margin, with letters marking the beginning and end.

61. Bodl. 296, (2467). Vellum, large folio, 2 cols., written about 1420. On the first fly leaf in a hand of XVI. Cent., "J. Herbert." It was given to the library by Sir Thomas Herbert, Bart., in 1666.

The books of the Old Testament, from Genesis to Psalms inclusive, without any prologues, in the later version. It ends in Psalm cxlviii. 8, the remainder having been cut away.

62. Bodl. 531, (2249). Vellum, 4°., 2 cols., written about 1440.

A Table to find the gospels, etc. after the use of Salisbury; the lessons from the Old Testament are given at length. Then the books of the New Testament, in the later translation, with the usual prologues.

63. Bodl. 665, formerly Arch. B. 9, (2998). Vellum, 4°., 2 cols., written about 1430, bound in black silk, with silver clasps of the XV. century, on which are the letters IHS. and MR.

A Table to find the lessons, epistles, and gospels. The books of the New Testament, in the later version, with the usual prologues. The lessons and epistles from the Old Testament.

64. Bodl. 771, (2553). Vellum, 4°., 2 cols., written about 1380—1390.

Clement of Lanthony's Monotessaron, translated by Wycliffe, with the usual prologue. Excerpts from the Epistles of St. Paul, the Catholic Epistles, and the Acts, followed by excerpts from the Old Testament. These passages appear to be in general accordance with the early version, but they present variations from it.

65. Bodl. 959, (3093). Very stout vellum, small folio, 2 cols., written by several scribes. The first hand proceeds to the end of Exodus, and is followed by a thinner and smaller writing as far as Judges, chap. vii. 13. A third and fourth hand, in a larger letter, continues the text to Ecclus. chap. xlviii., where it is taken up by a fifth, which goes on to the end, and which is the same with a part of the Douce Ms. 369. The text bears throughout marks of erasures and corrections; and to the end of chap. xxviii. of Genesis it has been retraced with darker ink by a considerably later hand. The initials are in red, but with little or no ornament; written certainly before 1390. On the verso of the last fly leaf, in a hand coeval with the Ms. this note, "that thing that ȝe spac of, touchinge Sauages doȝter wole not ȝit be." The volume is handsomely bound in green velvet with brass bosses and clasps, and appears to have been given to the library in 1602 by .... Springham.

The books of the Old Testament, from Genesis to Baruch iii. 20, ending abruptly with the words "othere men in the place of hem risen. The ȝunge." There is no gloss or note whatever by the original scribes throughout. It has prologues to Genesis, Joshua, I Paral., II Paral., I Esdr., Tobit, Esther, Job, Psalms, Proverbs, Eccles., Wisdom, Ecclus., Isaiah, and Baruch. It is defective from the end of Tobit to Judith iv. 16. Each scribe has peculiarities of orthography; the first writes preterites, seeyȝ, fleeyȝ; participles often with the prefix, as yschewid, yspoken, ytold, ydo, yȝofe; plurals, clothes, bryddes, foules; the second, beginning with Leviticus, writes, hit, hul, hully, gulty, hud for it, hill, hilly, guilty, hid; folle for full, folfulle for fulfil, flwys for fleece, opp for up, opon for upon, been for inf. be, ȝerstynday for yesterday, here for her, heo and sheo frequently for she, hanfol for handful, ȝut for yet, prude for pride, sulle for sell, yeeth for goes; the third continuing to the end of II Paral. has present participles in ande and ende, neuerthelater and neuerlater for nevertheless; beforn, besiden, bezondyn, abowtyn, behynden; sefne for seven, ȝistay for yesterday, heryn for theirs; and writes stroif, aboid, smoit, coistis; a fourth hand writes participles in n, thus, ȝyuyn, comyn, infinitives, hieȝyn, demyn; betwen for between, ther for their.

There is no doubt that this Ms. is the original copy of the translator, from which the other copies were made. In numerous instances the renderings have been changed during the progress of the sentence; sometimes an erasure has been made, as soon as the word was written, or even before it was completed, and another expression has been substituted; and on the recto of the last fly leaf a few words occur, which have been evidently set down by the translator for his guidance, when occasion should arrive for the like again.

66. Bodl. 554, (2326). Vellum, 4to., written about 1400.

The Psalter, in the more recent version, with very numerous marginal glosses from Austin and Lyra. Of these glosses that on the word hooli Ps. lxxxv. 2, may serve as an example, "that is, innocent anentis Saul. Lire here. Y am hooli. Cristis bodi, that is cristen puple, seith verili, Y am hooli, for it hath take grace of baptym and remissioun of synnes, sithen alle Cristen men cristenyd in Crist ben clothid in Crist. If thei seyn that thei be not hooli, thei doon wrong to the heed. The heed aloon is hooli and halewith, and nedith noon halewing," Austin here. At the end the following canticles in English: 1. The prayer of Manasses; 2. Confitebor; 5. Ego dixi; 4. Exultavit; 5. Cantemus Domino; 6. Domine, audivi; 7. Audite, celi; 8. Benedicite; Benedictus; 10. Magnificat; 11. Nunc dimittis. The Te Deum has been intended to follow, but the scribe has only written the title in rubric.

67. Bodl. 979, formerly Arch. B. 63 (3052). Thin vellum, 12°., 2 cols., written about 1440. It seems to have belonged to W. Waad, whose name is on the fly leaf.

The New Testament, in the later translation, with the usual prologues. Imperfect from the middle of John xx. to Romans i.

68. Selden 49, (3437). Vellum, very small 4°., 2 cols., written about 1440. It formerly belonged to Thomas Stanley of Gray's-Inn.

The four Gospels, in the later version, with the usual prologues. Prefixed is a Kalendar, and a Table of lessons, etc.

69. Selden 51, (3439). Vellum, 4°., 2 cols., written about 1440.

The books of the New Testament, in the later version, with the prologues as usual. Prefixed is, 1. A Table of matters or contents of the chapters of the several books; 2. A Kalendar, with a Table of the lessons, etc.; and subjoined are the lessons and epistles read in the church at mass, out of the Old Testament.

70. E. Mus. 110, (3552). Vellum, 4°., 2 cols., written about 1430. The names "Robert Parsons" and "J. Herbert" occur; presented to the library in 1666 by Sir Thomas Herbert, Bart.

The books of the New Testament, in the later version, and with the ordinary prologues. Prefixed is a Table of matters or contents of the chapters; the same as in Selden 51.

71. Fairfax 2, (3882). Vellum, in thick and large folio, 2 cols., written in 1408, as appears by this note at the end of the Apocalypse: "The eer of the lord m.ccc & viij. this book was endid;" the fourth c having been erased.

The Old and New Testament, in the more recent version, but with prologues in the Old Testament of the earlier version; though sometimes a little altered, particularly in the order of the words. The prologue to Isaiah, prefixed in this Ms. to Jeremiah, and that to Baruch, are however in the later version, and Wisdom has no prologue. There are many marginal glosses, several of which are additions by one or other of two hands, which have corrected the errors of the first scribe. Throughout the volume the contents of the chapters are written as running titles on the upper margin; for example, Gen. ii. "The serpent bigilide Eue. The penaunce of the serpent. Of Eue and of Adam." At the end of Ps. cl. this note, "The first salm of the Canticles was the herijng to the Lord of the puple of Israel, that was residue of the caitiftee." Then the Latin titles of the several Canticles of the church, and the places of Scripture in which they are severally to be found. Underneath, "Se now Quicunque vult in Englissh, the wiche Athanasy, a doctor of Greke, made, 'Who euere wole be saaf——he mai not be saaf.'" On the recto of the next leaf, "the Kalender of alle the lessons, pistels and gospels of al the ȝeer aftir the vse of Salisberi." The orthography is peculiar; biȝgge for bie; liȝgge for lie; iȝcching for itching; periȝshe for perish; fleiȝsshis for fleshes; quyȝsshuns for cushions; angwiȝss for anguish; biheulde for beheld; leose for lese; ȝife for give; ȝofe for given. It has also some peculiar readings, as knaue child, Lev. xii. 7, where all other copies read male child. At the end of the Apocalypse is a Table or summary of matters in the New Testament.

72. Fairfax 11, (3891). Vellum, small folio, 2 cols., written about 1450. It belonged to "W. Santclair of Roislin, Knecht," then to "D. Sinclair of Roisling." Sir Thomas Fairfax has written his name at the beginning, adding "Bought in Scotland."

The books of the New Testament, in the later version, with the usual prologues. Prefixed is a Kalendar, and a Table of lessons, etc. after the use of Salisbury.

73. Fairfax 21, (3901). Vellum, small 4°., 2 cols., written about 1450.

The Epistles of St. Paul, Acts, Catholic Epistles and Apocalypse, with the usual prologues, in the later version. Prefixed is a Table of the epistles, after the use of Salisbury. This volume is erroneously described in Bernard's Catalogi Mss. Angliæ, fol. 1697.

74. Hatton 111, (4050). Vellum, thick 16°., the greater part written before 1400; on the binding are impressed the royal arms, temp. James I.; damaged at each extremity. It contains:—

Several Psalms or extracts from them, prefaced by "Lord God, vouche saf to take up these psalmes that ben writen," etc. The first commences "Lord, perceyue my wordis with eren." fol. 1.—Then extracts and sentences from the Old Testament, beginning, "The wraththe of God forsothe is turned in to mercy," II Macc. viii. 5. fol. 9. Neither the Psalms nor sentences appear to be in either of the printed versions.—A Table of lessons, fol. II. b.—The four Gospels, Catholic Epistles and Apocalypse, in the earlier version, without prologues.—At the end, a Table of matters or contents. This occupies nine pages, but ends imperfect in Lk. xx.

75. Junius 29, (5141). Vellum, small folio, 2 cols., written about 1430; on the covers are stamped the initials E. G.; a leaf at the end is supplied by a later hand.

The books of the New Testament, in the later version, with the usual prologues. Prefixed is a Table of lessons, etc. but imperfect.

76. Dugdale 46, (6534). Thick vellum, small 4°., 2 cols., written about 1400. On the top of the first leaf, "T. Fairfax, ex dono patris H. F. 1619."

The Epistles of St. Paul, with the usual prologues, and two to the Epistle to Romans. The Ms. is of the later version. On one of the fly leaves, in a hand of the XVII. cent. is the Pater Noster and Creed, in English.

77. Rawlinson C. 237, 238, (544). Vellum, 2 vols. 12°., 2 cols., written about 1450. On the first folio is the name of the Earl of "Stamford, 1693."

The books of the New Testament, in the later version, with the usual prologues; the Epistle to the Romans has the two prologues. It is preceded by a Kalendar.

78. Rawlinson C. 257. Vellum, 4°., 2 cols., ff. 209, written about 1430. It seems to have once belonged to Thomas Hearne; defective at the beginning. At Thomas Rawlinson's sale, in March, 1733–4, it formed lot 821, and was bought there by Dr. Rawlinson.

The books of the New Testament, in the later version, including the Epistle to the Laodiceans. It has the usual prologues, and to the Romans, two. It commences in Mt. ii. 3.

79. Rawlinson C. 258, (615). Stout vellum, 4°., 2 cols., written about 1400. On a slip inserted, in Rawlinson's hand, "Purvey's New Testament, numb. 2, 4°., ninth day's sale." (Lot 702 of Thomas Rawlinson's sale, 173¾.) At the end of the Gospel of John, in a hand nearly, if not quite contemporary, "Iste liber constat fratri Johanni Lacy, ordinis predicatorum reclus' Noui castri super Tynam." A portrait of this John Lacy while in prison, with the date 1420, occurs in a Ms. of St. John's College, Oxford, No. 94.

The books of the New Testament, in the following order; the four Gospels, Acts, Catholic Epistles, Epistles of St. Paul and Apocalypse, in the early version, without prologues.

80. Rawlinson C. 259, (508). Vellum, in small 4°., 2 cols., ff. 252, written perhaps about 1430; on the first fly leaf, in Hearne's hand, "Suum cuiq. Tho. Hearne, Oct. 9, 1719. I have made mention of this Ms. in my Preface to Camden's Eliz. (Oxon. 1717, p. 123.) It then belong'd to Edw. Etterick, Esq., Fellow of New College. I purchas'd it since his death;" and on the second fly leaf, "The New Testament, in old English, commonly called Wicliff's Translation," etc. On the verso of this leaf is written "Scriptus hic liber circa A. D. 1370, nam quæ notantur paginis a & k videntur tum recentia;" beneath, in the hand of Thomas Baker, "Scriptum fuisse hunc librum exploratum habeo, A. D. 1345;" and lower, "Sed amicus noster egregie fallitur, aut ego fallor." It is of this copy Lewis speaks, Hist. of Translations of the Bible, p. 26 n. ed. 1820. In a Kalendar prefixed, which is very neatly written with rubricated letters, etc. is noted by the same original hand, on the lower margin of fol. 1, Anno dñi m.ccc.lxi in festo scī Mauri abbatis erat ventus validus; and again, on lower margin of fol. 5, Anno dñi mcccxlviij in festo scī Michaelis incipiebat prima pestilencia Lond.

The books of the New Testament, in the later version, with the usual prologues. There are two prologues to the Romans, of which the first is of the earlier version. Then "the lessouns and pistlis of the oolde lawe, that ben rad in the chirche bi al the ȝeer," which seem to be of the later version. On the fly leaves at the end are various historical memoranda, in the years 1531, 1553, 1554, and 1558.

81. Rawlinson C. 752, (554). Thin vellum, 12°., 2 cols., XV. cent. In 1609 it belonged to Richard Staunton, and afterwards to Rob. Nash, M.A. of Wadham College; on the verso of the last folio is also this note "Constat iste liber dñō Rogero Wattun clericī et p'sbete .. a°. dñi m°. q̄g̃ısim . . . o et Regis Henrici octaui . . . . "

The four Gospels, with the ordinary prologues; the Apocalypse without a prologue; then, in another but coeval hand, the Epistle of Jude; all in the later version. After the Gospels, a blank folio, on part of which and of the preceding column a second hand has written an exhortation relative to baptism, beginning "Dere cristen soulis, I praie ȝou with al mekenesse and charite —— seith in the gospel."

82. Rawlinson C. 883, (835). Vellum, 4°., ff. 48, of the xv. cent.

The Gospel of Matthew, with the usual prologue; in the later version.

83. Gough, Eccl. Top. 5. Vellum, 4°., 2 cols., of the early part of the xv. cent. On the verso of the last leaf but one is a copy of the will of Robert Thoft of St. Botulph, in Latin, dat. 11 Apr. 1415; inside the cover, in a hand of xvi. cent. "W. Th.;" on the top of the second leaf, "Jane Turner;" on the verso of the last leaf but two, a monogram seemingly intended for "A. T." with the date 1563, and below "Docter Turner, Dean of Welles;" on the recto and verso of last leaf "William Mylett est nomen meum. Wennyfred Turner." The Ms. subsequently belonged to Dr. Daniel Waterland and to the Rev. John Lewis, who published from it the four Gospels of his edition in 1731. It was purchased of his executors by Ebenezer Mussell, subsequent to whose sale in 1766 it became the property of William Herbert.

The books of the New Testament, of the later version, with the usual prologues. Then a Table of "the pistlis and gospels of the Newe Testament;" and a list of the books contained in it. The quotations in the table appear to be made from the earlier translation.

84. Douce 36. Vellum, 12°., 2 cols., written about 1440. On the fly leaf "Hen. Jeffreyes." In 1728 it belonged to Jo. Ames; it was bought at his sale in 1760 (lot 825) by Mr. Tutet, at whose sale in 1786 (lot 500) it was purchased by Gustavus Brander.

The book of Tobit, in the later version.

85. Douce 240. Vellum, small 4°., 2 cols., written about 1440. On the fly leaves at the end, "Thomas Peuerel," with his arms tricked, early xvi. cent.; "Jas. Peuerell;" "Lucas Campion." It has the book-plate of the Rev. Fred. Ekins; and it wants a leaf at the beginning of Matthew, and between the end of John xxi. and Rom. i. near the end; much damaged in parts.

The books of the New Testament, with the usual prologues, of the later version. At the end a Table to find the lessons, etc.

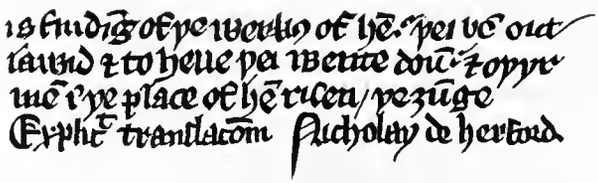
86. Douce 265. Thin vellum, 4°., 2 cols., written about 1440. At the end of the Table of lessons is a note, that the mother of Robart Hornbe gave him this New Testament, 17 March (15)43. It belonged to Thomas Rawlinson, afterwards to sir Peter Thompson, who bought it in 173$\frac{3}{4}$ at Rawlinson's sale, lot 365; and next to W. Herbert.

The books of the New Testament, with the usual prologues, and in the later version; preceded by a Table to find the lessons, etc.

87. Douce 369. Vellum, in large folio, 2 cols., ff. 486 (429 bis), consisting of two distinct Mss., both imperfect.

The first is written with marginal corrections throughout, in three different hands, all before 1390; the first of which goes as far as the end of chap. vi. of Judith; the second, to chap. ii. 4, of Esther, and the third to the end. It contains:—

The books of the Old Testament from Num. xx. 2 to Baruch iii. 20, with the usual prologues of St. Jerome, in the earlier version. It ends abruptly with the words "and other men in the place of hem risen. The ȝunge." Immediately below is written by a contemporary hand the following note, Explic^{t}. translacō Nicholay de herford. a facsimile of which, accompanied by three lines of the text is annexed:



The orthography is peculiar: the present participles terminate in ende or ande, as berende, seiende, fiȝtende, fleande, seande, astoneande; the infinitives retain the final n, as dreden, turnen, ouercomyn; it reads aȝen for against, betwe for between; them and ther generally for them and their; and often omits the n of the 3 pers. pl. indic. Throughout are marginal corrections of the text by a second but coeval hand, and on the lower margin at the commencement of each chapter as far Ecclus. xlvi. are added Latin distichs, giving the subject or contents. These are in different and somewhat later hands. It is defective from Judges i. 21, to iv. 4. There is evidence, that this first part of the volume was transcribed from Bodl. 959 before the corrections of this last Ms. were made. See Jerem. xlix. 32, l. 39. It is also remarkable, that the third hand in this first part is the same with that which has completed the Bodleian Ms.

The second part of the volume, from fol. 251 to the end, is written about the same time as the former, in a neat roundish letter as far as Mark v. fol. 391^{b}, but from this place it is continued in a thick and clumsier hand, which same hand has corrected the former part. This last mentioned writing has also been corrected by a later. It comprises

The books of the Old Testament from Isaiah to II Maccabees inclusive, and the Gospels, Epistles of St. Paul and Acts to c.xxviii. 15., with the usual prologues. The Ms. is defective from Ezek. i. 26 to xxxii. 23.

88. Douce 370. Vellum, 4°., 2 cols., ff. 265, written before 1400, by two or more hands, with corrections and erasures throughout. At the end is a note, temp. Eliz., by Geo. Rawdon of Fellonglaye, co. Warwick; and another note, stating the volume to have been bought in 1756 of Mr. John Cook of Uppingham. Mr. Douce acquired it at the sale of John Jackson, in 1794, lot 345. The volume is in stamped leather binding of the time of Elizabeth, with brass bosses and clasps.

The books of the Old Testament from Genesis to II Paralipomenon in the earlier version, with the usual prologues to Genesis, Joshua, I Kings and I and II Paralipomenon.

ASHMOLE MUSEUM.

89. Ashmole 1517, (8179). Vellum, 4°., ff. 192, 2 cols., written about 1420. Much mutilated.

The books of the New Testament, as far as the Epistle of St. Jude v. 23, in the later version, with the usual prologues. Prefixed is a Table of lessons, etc. imperfect; and at the end are the lessons of the Old Testament, also imperfect.

BRASEN NOSE COLLEGE.

90. B. N. Coll. 10. Vellum, 4°., ff. 254, 2 cols., XV. cent. Given to the College by Edward Hill, Vicar of Huddersfield, Yorkshire.

The New Testament, in the later version. Prefixed is a Table of the lessons, etc. after the use of Salisbury.

CHRIST CHURCH.

91. Ch. Ch. E. 4. Vellum, large folio, 2 cols., written not much after 1400. It belonged to Robert Claye, Vicar of Flower in Northamptonshire, who in 1575 gave it to Edward Saunders of the same place, who again gave it to Christ Church.

The books of the Old and New Testament, in the early version, with the usual prologues in the Old Testament and to the Gospels; the Epistles have none. The Epistle to the Ephesians is placed after II Thess. There are scarcely any marginal, and very few textual glosses. Those upon the titles of the Psalms are to be excepted, which have been added by a second hand, and do not differ from what are found in copies of the more recent text. Its orthography is remarkable. The present participles terminate in ende or ande; and the infinitives retain the n, as don, bern, stoneyn, dreden, pershen: it uses frequently k for c, as kumpas, kuntre, kubitus, kome, kumpany; reads kne3, ble3, for knew, blew; oen, anoen, droeue, for one, anon, drove; loeues, coestis, coet, for loaves, coasts, coat; wiche for which; and often them, not hem, and ther, not her, for their. Prefixed is a Table of the lessons, etc. after the use of Salisbury. The quotations in the table are from the later version.

92. Ch. Ch. G. 10. Vellum, small 4°., 2 cols., written about 1440; of the gift of Thomas Ballowe, M.A. and Student, Oct. 21, 1629.

The New Testament, with the usual prologues, in the later version. Prefixed is a Table of the lessons, etc. and subjoined are the lessons and epistles out of the old law, and also a Table of the matters contained in the New Testament.

93. Ch. Ch. G. 12. Vellum, written in single columns, in the latter half of the XV. cent.

St. Paul's Epistles, from the Galatians to the Hebrews inclusive, in the later translation.

CORPUS CHRISTI COLLEGE.

94. C. C. Coll. 4, (1471). Vellum, in very large and thick folio, perhaps written before 1420; on the fly leaves occur the names of "Thomas Moulder, gentleman," and "Thomas Reuely," in a hand of the beginning of the XVI. cent.; and in the imperfect transcript of a deed at the end of the vol., "Willelmus Mason, nuper de Leighton Bussard in coun. Bedd., yeman;" on the first leaf, "Liber Collegii Corporis Christi Oxon. ex dono M^ri. Antonii Langford, generosi, et Reverendi in Christo Patris Thomæ (Bilson), episcopi Wintoniensis Secretarii, Decemb. 8, 1615."

It commences with a Table of the lessons, etc. the quotations being made from the earlier version; occupying eleven pages. On the verso of the last leaf the names of the books of the Bible; and on the outer margin of this page, in a hand of XVI. cent., 'the interpretation of certaine (40 or 50) harde wordes in this booke.'—Then follow the books of the Old and New Testament, in the earlier version, with the usual prologues.

95. C. C. Coll. 20, (1487). Vellum, small folio, 2 cols., written in the earlier half of XV. cent.; on the verso of the fly leaf at the commencement of the volume, "per me Nicholau Hille," and below, "Frauncis Vaughan."

The books of the Old Testament from the I Esdras to the II Maccabees inclusive, in the later version, with prologues to Isaiah and Baruch. The final rubric is, "Here endeth the secounde book of Machabeis. Blessid be the holi trinyte. Amen." Below, by some ignorant person, in a hand of the early part of the xvi. cent., "wylke was endit in ye. 3yer of oure Lord a thousand and ij. hundreth."

Lincoln College.

96. Linc. Coll. Arch. 15. Vellum, large thick folio, 2 cols., written about 1420.

The books of the Old and New Testament, in the later version. It is remarkable, in having the portions of the General Prologue descriptive of the several books prefixed to them respectively. That belonging to Genesis however has been placed after the 11 Maccabees. It has some marginal glosses, and in the text those usually found there. Isaiah, Baruch and the books of the New Testament have the ordinary prologues. It is defective from Job ix. 18, to Psalm xvii. 38. At the commencement of the vol. is inserted a copy of the printed prospectus issued by the Rev. John Russell, 1 Aug. 1719, for an edition of the Old and New Testament of this version.

New College.

97. New Coll. 66, (1030). Vellum, folio, 2 cols., written perhaps about 1430; the text is occasionally very inaccurate, and many corrections have been made throughout by a second hand.

The books of the Old Testament from Genesis to the Psalter inclusive, in the later version. The Ms. originally contained more, as appears by the last rubric, "Here endith the book of Salmes, and bigynneth the prolog on the book of Prouerbis," etc. The Prologues of St. Jerome are prefixed to Genesis, Joshua, 1 Kings, 1 and 11 Paralip., 1 Esdras, Tobit, Judith, Esther, Job and the Psalter. Those to Genesis, Joshua, 1 Kings, and 1 Paralip. are of a later version, found, as to the three last mentioned books, only in this copy, but as to Genesis, found also in Sion Coll. $\frac{32}{1}$ and Hereford 206. The remaining prologues agree with those of the copies of the earlier version.

98. New Coll. 67, (1031). Thin vellum, small 4°., single cols., written soon after 1400. It was presented to the College in 1588, by Thomas Martin, LL.D.

The books of the New Testament, with the usual prologues, in the earlier version, but with numerous variations. The prologues have in some instances been added after the text was completed; there is none to the Apocalypse, but a space has been left blank for it. The four introductory verses of St. Luke, which occur only in this Ms., and in the Addl. Ms. 11,858, are given here, as if an ordinary prologue, with the rubric Prologe. The Ms. is remarkable for long marginal glosses, some of which are peculiar to it, and the greater part of them have been found only in this copy and in the Harleian Ms. 5017. These do not occur in the Gospels, but commence on 1 Cor. vi. 4. At the beginning of the volume the rubricator has struck out many textual glosses, and made other corrections, for example, Mt. i. 20, pr. m. forsothe, rubr. for; 23, pr. m. interpreted or expownned, rubr. interpreted; ii. 15, pr. m. fyllyd that thing, rubr. fulfillyd, tert. m. fyllyd; iii. 9, pr. m. for whi, rubr. for; 13, pr. m. that he shoulde be, rubr. for to be. The rubricator's corrections do not extend beyond Matthew. In its first twenty-one chapters the Ms. originally agreed pretty closely with the text printed from Douce 369, but the first twelve chapters in consequence of corrections now generally coincide with the texts of Magd. Coll. Cambr. L. 5. 19, and Br. Mus. Addl. 11, 858. From Mt. xiii. to Luke xix. it has from the original scribe readings peculiar to itself and the last mentioned Ms., though in some instances even these readings have been introduced by the corrector or correctors. Thence to the end of the Gospels it agrees more closely perhaps than any other copy with the printed text; while in the remaining part of the volume it differs very much from it, and has readings of its own.—The beginning and end of the gospels and epistles for the church services are indicated by letters placed in the margin.—The text appears to have been copied from an original having the present participle terminating in ende, which has led to frequent mistakes, and particularly to the occurrence of the preterite where the participle should stand, as puttede for puttende. The ignorance or negligence of the scribe is elsewhere evident.—On the first two leaves, in one of the hands which executed the body of the Ms. are, 1. Observations on Charity, from 1 Cor. xiii. 1—8, with a short comment, beg., "Saynt Poule spekith of charite, and seith on this wise, If y speke with mannus tunge;" 2. The ten Commandments, with a short comment on each, beg., "These ben the x. comaundementis of God, the whiche euereche man mot kepe, 3if he wil be saued;" 3. The seven virtues, five bodily and five ghostly wits, shortly expounded, beg., "These ben the seuene vertues and remedies a3ens the seuen dedely synnes."—On the verso of the leaf concluding the Apocalypse is written a Table of the gospels and epistles read in the church throughout the year, in Latin. It fills five closely written pages, and commences with the rubric, Hic incipiunt cotaciones euangeliorum et epistolarum tocius anni legend.

99. New Coll. 320, (1284). Paper, small folio, 2 cols., written about 1460.

The Psalter, with the Prologue, in the later version.—The Canticles, 1. Confitebor. 2. Ego dixi. 3. Exultavit. 4. Cantemus. 5. Domine, audivi. 6. Audite, celi. 7. Benedicite. 8. Te Deum. 9. Magnificat, "My soule worshipeth the lord." 10. Benedictus. 11. Nunc dimittis. 12. Quicunque vult, "Who that euere wil be saaf."—After this some seven-line stanzas, beg., "Swete and benyngne moder and may." Beneath, a few Latin lines, and at the bottom of the column, by the same scribe, in red, By Willm̃ Hucker.

Oriel College.

100. Or. Coll. 80. Vellum, 4°., ff. 90, 2 cols., xv. cent. It belonged in 1608 to John Warter.

The Gospels of Matthew, Mark and Luke, in the later version. It ends imperfectly in Luke xx. 32. Prefixed is the rule for finding the lessons, etc. after the use of Salisbury.

QUEEN'S COLLEGE.

101. Qu. Coll. 23, (947). Vellum, in large thick folio, 2 cols., written about 1420; on the verso of a blank leaf following the Table of lessons is this note, "Ego Willm. Smyth, seruiens scutellie Dominæ Reginæ Elizabethæ, incepi legere 2° die Octob. an°. 1561, et finem feci 10 die Junii a°. 1563; iterum relegere incepi 12° Junii an°. praedicto."

It begins with a Table to find the lessons, etc. at mass, after the use of Salisbury; the quotations in which are made from the later version. Then the Old and New Testament, in the later version. The books from Exodus to Proverbs inclusive have each a prologue peculiar to this Ms. Ecclesiastes to Ecclesiasticus inclusive have no prologue. Isaiah has the ordinary prologue, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel and 1 Maccabees have each a peculiar prologue. The books of the New Testament have the usual prologues. The text begins in Gen. i. 20, and is again defective from 1 Paral. xxix. 7, to 11 Paral. iii. 1.

102. Qu. Coll. 369. Vellum, 4°., ff. 198, 2 cols., written in the early part of xv. cent.; imperfect at the end.

The four Gospels, and the Epistles of St. Paul as far as 1 Tim. ii 12, in the early version. The rubric at the end of John is, "Here eendith the gospel of Joon, and also here is the eendynge of alle the gospellis as thei stonden in the bible, by the seeynge of the foure Euangelistis, Matheu, Marke, Luke, and Joon."

ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE.

103. St. John's Coll. 7, (1832). Vellum, folio, 2 cols., written about 1420. It was presented to the library in 1620 by Humphrey Haggat, a member of the College; on the upper margin of the first leaf, in a hand about 1700, is this note of no authority, "The translation of the Bible in Englishe by Master John Wicklife, in the time of King Edward the Third, written with his owne hand;" the last words of which are partially erased. The volume appears to be the production of more than one scribe.

The books of the Old Testament, with the exception of the Psalter, in the more recent version; with a few marginal glosses. From the final rubric seems to have formerly contained the New Testament also. Isaiah and Baruch have each the usual prologue. This Ms. has some peculiar readings, and, from 11 Paral. i. 1 to 11 Esdr. v. 3, agrees with Bodl. 277, and C. C. Coll. Cambr. 147.

104. St. John's Coll. 79, (41). Vellum, in long 4°., 2 cols., written before the middle of the xv. cent. In the beginning of the next cent. it belonged to Thomas Blunt or Blounte of Syluntun (Sillington, co. Warwick), and also, as it seems, to Oliver Weever. It was given to the College by Nicolas Linnebye, a fellow, in 1605.

The four Gospels, with the usual prologues, in the later version. It ends imperfect in John xiii. 4, and also has a leaf cut out, which contained part of Luke vi.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE.

105. Univ. Coll. G. 3, (96). Vellum, small 4°., written about 1430—1440. On the first of four fly leaves at the beginning of the volume is written, "This book seemeth to have been made by John Wickliffe;" and beneath, "I take this note to be of Mr. Obad. Walker's handwriting. Teste Guil. Smith, Aug. 26, 1700;" on the verso of the last fly leaf at the end, the name "Stephano Larkyn."

The General Prologue to the books of the Bible. This is followed by,—1. A table of the books of Scripture, beginning, "The prolog w^t^. —— xv. c. Genesis w^t^. —— l. c." and ends "Apocalips w^t^ —— xxij. c. The summe of bookes with the prolog conteynith—lxx . . .;"—2. A synopsis of the genealogies of the Old Testament, in Latin; —3. Excerpts from the New Testament, for the Passion, and for Palm Sunday, seemingly taken from the later version;—4. The ten Commandments in verse, beg. "Thou shalt have no God but oon."

CAMBRIDGE.

UNIVERSITY LIBRARY.

106. Cambr. Libr. Dd. 1. 27, (9341). Vellum, very thick folio, 2 cols., written perhaps about 1430—1440. It formerly belonged to Dr. John More, Bp. of Norwich, No. 155.

The books of the Old and New Testament, in the more recent version. The books to Esther inclusive have no prologue; Job has two, both of the earlier version; so likewise the Psalter; Proverbs and Ecclesiastes have each a prologue in the same version. Those to Wisdom and Ecclus. are of a later version, found only in this Ms. Isaiah and Baruch have the usual prologues of the later version; and to Ezekiel and Daniel are prefixed the prologues which are found elsewhere only in the Queen's College Oxf. Ms. 23. The prologues in the New Testament agree with the more recent text. Between the Old and New Testaments is set a Table to find the lessons, etc. after the use of Salisbury. In Zech. viii. a second hand commences, and continues to 11 Maccabees, which at first gives considerable variations from the text, and has often peculiar readings, for instance, 1 Tim. v. 23, lest thou haunte; 1 Tim. prol. lore; Tit. iii. 2, temperat, ethir mesurable; Gal. iv. 5, adopcioun, ether purchasyng.

107. Cambr. Libr. Ee. 1. 10, (9348). Vellum, small 4°., 2 cols., written in the earlier half of the xv. cent.; imperfect at both extremes; formerly Ms. More, No. 162.

An abstract of the books of the Old Testament, from II Paralip. to II Maccabees inclusive. It is made from the earlier version. The language is very slightly altered, chiefly by a different collocation of words, the insertion of an article or pronoun, and occasionally of a verbal gloss. The matter both in the prologues and the text is much abridged, one half or more being omitted. It originally contained the first book of Paralip., but now commences with this rubric, Explicit primus liber paralipom̄. incipit prologus libri secundi. The prologue is thus given, "Eusebius, Jerom, senden — of Crist sownen, etc. ¶ At the laste — to our trauele, etc." The first chapter thus, (v. 1.) "Salamon thanne — and he magnifiede — an heiȝte, etc. (5) And Salamon souȝte — (6) steiȝ — he offride — (7) Forsothe so — (8) and thou settist — (9) forsothe thou — (10) ȝeue thou — forsothe who may worthili deme this — so great. (11) Forsothe God — Forsothe for — thou axidist — my peple — (12) forsothe richessis — like thee etc." Then "ij. ch." Again, Dan. vi. 1. "It pleside — (4) the side of — feithful, etc. Thanne (6) princes — (7) or decree — asking — of the king — (8) king, now — sentence, etc. (10) which thing — (12) the maundement, etc. (15) Forsothe — of Persis — (17) with the ring — (18) vnsowpid, etc. (19) Thanne — (20) into Daniel — from the liouns — (22) anoieden not me, etc. (23) Thanne — (26) God of Daniel, etc." After the 150th Psalm, of which the first verse only is given, there follow these Canticles: 1. Te Deum, "We herien thee." 2. Benedicite, "Alle the werkis." 3. Benedictus, "Blessed be." 4. Magnificat, "My soule magnifieth." 5. Nunc dimittis, "Lord, thou leenest." 6. Quicunque vult, "Whoeuere wole bee saaf." The Ms. is defective from Amos ix. 2 to Jonah ii. 1, and ends abruptly in II Macc. xv. 1.

108. Cambr. Libr. Gg. 6. 8. Vellum, in small 4°., 2 cols., written about 1440.

The New Testament, in the later version, with the ordinary prologues. On a fly leaf at the end, in a hand of the xvi. cent. the Epistle to the Laodiceans, with its prologue.

109. Cambr. Libr. Gg. 6. 23. Vellum, small 4°., 2 cols., written about 1450. On a fly leaf, in a hand of xvii. cent., "M^{d}. that I tooke Mr. Jones vi^{s}. in pawne for this book, to be paid agayne when I bring him to his shoppe agayne, and I to pay him j^{d}. a daye so long as I haue him, the xxith. of June. Richard Jones."

The Epistles of St. Paul, Acts, Catholic Epistles, and Apocalypse, in the later version, with the usual prologues. It is defective to Rom. viii. 35. A second hand of xvi. cent. has supplied from II Thess. ii. 10 to Acts vii. 17.

110. Cambr. Libr. Kk. 1. 8. Vellum, 4°., 2 cols., written about 1430.

The General Prologue to the Bible.—Then, in the hand which has written the chief part of the Ms., a Table of the lessons, etc. for the whole year.—The books of the New Testament, with the usual prologues, in the later version.—Then, in a different hand, "Tabula noui testamenti, metrice tractata."—Incip. "Natus Christus est, etc. Adoratur a magis," etc.—After two blank leaves, in a later hand, the lessons and epistles of the Old Testament, beginning with "Feria vi. prime ebdom. Aduentus, Ys. 51." They fill five leaves, and are left unfinished.

111. Cambr. Libr. Ll. 1. 13, (9307). Vellum, 4°., 2 cols., written about 1450; on the first leaf, in a hand of the xvi. cent. "John Parker;" formerly Ms. More, No. 121.

The epistles and lessons from the Old Testament, in the earlier version;—A kalendar of the lessons, etc. throughout the year;—The books of the New Testament, in the later version, with the usual prologues, except that an additional paragraph is subjoined to that on St. Matthew.

112. Cambr. Libr. Mm. 2. 15. "ex munificentia regia, 1715." Vellum, thick folio, 2 cols., written about 1430; bound in calf, with the words Verbum Domini stamped on each side. On the leaf preceding the Psalms, is written "Jhesus amor meus ꝙ Stephanus Tomson;" and again, on one of the leaves in Luke, the same, with the addition "sacri palacii notarii, in anno 1519;" and on the lower margin over agaiust Prov. xxii. the name "Anne Weldon," in a hand of Henry the Eighth's time. In the ornamental border to Psalms, a large initial W is inserted, but perhaps by a later hand. On a piece of paper stitched to the second fly leaf of vellum is written in a hand of the xvi. cent., "Only vpryghtnesnes is the faythful presarver of power and dyngnyte—God send you therein long to persever,—and after to lyue in heauen for ever."

"Sethen I knowe my lyf is short,
And that my book and I must part,
to you my dere and faythful frende
My chefest juel I doo comend.
"Your pooer and faythful frend in the lord, Elyzabeth Tyrwhyt."

On the top of the paper, in a different hand, "Calendis Januarii A°. 1571." On the recto of the next leaf, in a border richly ornamented in gold and colors, executed in the reign of Edw.VI., and in a large text letter, "The holy Bible, the lyuely worde of the lyueynge God, the sworde of the spirite, and the lanterne of lyght to oure foote steppis, a treasure more preciouse then golde and precious stonis." Then in gold letters, "Deuternomiv̄ 11." followed by, "Ye shall laye vp these wordis of myne in youre hertis, and in youre myndis, and shall bynde them in your handis for a signe, that thei may be as it were a remembrance bitwyx your eies."

The books of the Old Testament, in the more recent version, with prologues to Isaiah and Baruch.—Then, upon the second of two inserted leaves of thick vellum, is painted in large capitals of gold,

EDOVERDVS SEXTVS.

The whole on a square blue tablet set upon a sort of scroll or border. On the verso of this leaf a border of gold and colors, within which is written in the same large text hand before noticed, "The true copie of a Prologe, whiche John Wicklife wrote to this Bible, which he translatid into Englishe about two hundrid yers past, that was in the tyme of kynge Edwarde the thryd, as may iustly be gatherid of the mention that is had of him in diuers auncient Cronicles.—Anno domini 1550." After this follows in the old hand the General Prologue to the Bible, beg. "Fyue and twenti bookis," corrected by a second scribe. From this copy Crowley printed the prologue in 1550. Then follow the books of the New Testament, in the later version, with the usual prologues. It has marginal glosses.

Caius College.

113. Caius Coll. 179, (1067). Vellum, small 4°., ff. 83, written soon after 1400, imperfect at the beginning. Presented to the College by . . More, formerly a fellow.

The Gospels of Matthew and Mark, in the more recent version; the latter with the usual prologue. It is defective to Mt. ix. 36, and from xx. 17 to xxi. 12. The Ms. has been corrected throughout by a hand of the xv. century. Both the original and the amended text offer some peculiar readings, as Mt. x. 1. 1st eche langour; x. 28. 2d the soule; x. 41. 2d he schal take; xi. 24. 1st esier in the day; xii. 9. 1st he entride into; 2d he ran into; xii. 10. 1st lo! ther was a man; xv. 26. 1st ȝeue to houndis; xvii. 16. 2d hym into me; xxvi. 15. 1st thritty penes; xxvi. 16. 2d souȝte beste tyme; Mk. i. 5. 1st stones of the mounteyn; i. 7. 1st a greet vois; iv. 6. 1st not moisture; 2d not rote; iv. 7. 1st fel among thornes.

114. Caius Coll. 343, (1066). Vellum, in 4°., 2 cols., written about the commencement of the xv. cent. At the end of the Apocalypse is a painting representing Christ appearing to Mary Magdalen. In 1625 it belonged to John Heath, and in 1627 to Richard Harvey of Chislehurst in Kent. Presented to the College by . . More, formerly a fellow.

The four Gospels with the usual prologues, in the later version, fol. 1. A Table to find the lessons, etc., fol. 79. —The names of the books of the New Testament, and number of the chapters in each, fol. 85ᵇ.—A kalendar of the months, with the epistles and gospels for holidays noted in it, fol. 86. At the bottom of February this note by the original scribe: "Thus the lettris faylen on lepeȝeeris in alle tymes. This was writun in the ȝeer of g sonday nex (sic) aftir lepeȝeer of b. In the ȝeer of the Lord m.ccc.lxxxxvij." See a like note in Emanuel Coll. Ms. 1. 2. 13.—The Epistles of St. Paul, Acts, Catholic Epistles, and Apocalypse, in the later version, with the usual prologues, fol. 92. —The beginnings and endings of the lessons are marked in the margin by red letters answering to the table.

Christ's College.

115. Ch. Coll. F. 1. 14. Vellum, small 4°., 2 cols., written about the year 1420.

The New Testament in the later version, with the usual prologues. A hand of the xvii. cent. has noted on Matth. vi. 1, that instead of "riȝtfulnesse" a manuscript in the Lichfield library read "rightwisnes."

Corpus Christi College.

116. C. C. Coll. 147, (1433). Vellum, 2 cols., folio, xv. cent., written perhaps before 1430; the first scribe is negligent at the commencement, but more careful as he proceeds; the second scribe also is inaccurate, and often corrects for the worse, as in John iv. 6, after sat he expunges thus; 9. changes thou into than; 10. changes he into yt.

The General Prologue to the books of the Bible. There are several annotations in the margin of this prologue by Geoffrey Blith, Bp. of Lichfield and Coventry (1503–1533), who, it is evident, supposed Wycliffe to be the author; for instance, on the passage beginning "Alas! Alas! Alas!" in chap. xiii. "Nota contra universitatem Oxonie nequiciam Wycleff, qui ingressus est, ut videret. Vana loquebatur, cor eius congregauit iniquitatem sibi, qui cum cerneret se non posse doctos a fide avertere, voluit et hic suasit omnibus indoctis ad sacram scripturam libernm debere patere ingressum, vt saltem simplices erroris sui veneno corrumperet. Contra cujus errorem et similem arroganciam tota illa laborat epistola pro deinterpretacione omnium librorum sacre scripture que incipit 'Frater Ambrosius,' et communiter præponitur toti biblie, sed non est mirum si a veritate discedat quæ mentita est iniquitas sibi."—A Table to find the lessons, etc.; the quotations are from the later version. A leaf has been torn out at the end, rendering the kalendar imperfect; it ends with the "Translacioun of Seint Benet." The books of the Old and New Testament in the later version, but throughout the greater part revised. It has numerous textual glosses, and a few marginal glosses in the commencement of St. Matthew. Parallel passages are sometimes noted; in the New Testament and in some few places of the Old, the lessons, gospels, and epistles are marked by letters placed in the margin, and in the epistles, the holiday is set down by a hand nearly contemporary with the original scribe. The Ms. is defective from Matth. xvii. 19 to xx. 28, and ends imperfectly in Rev. xxi. 18. The orthography is in some respects peculiar: atte is frequently put for atthe; artou for art thou; sekit, comit for seeketh, cometh; be for by; weten for witen. Leaves have been inserted by a later hand at Judith vii. 18—x. 2, xiii. 8—Esth. ii. 5, viii. 8—xiv. 6, in which the text agrees with the usual copies. A second hand corrects the books from Lamentations to Daniel. In the margin of Ex. vi. 11 is the following note by the original scribe, "Thus the peple farith now, for fere of the prelatis more and lesse."

117. C. C. Coll. 440, (1440). Vellum, 8°., 2 cols., written about 1430.

The four Gospels, with the usual prologues, and in the later text. A Table of the gospels for Sundays, after the use of Salisbury, is prefixed.

EMANUEL COLLEGE.

118. Em. Coll. 2. Vellum, folio, 2 cols., written about 1420; on a fly leaf in a hand of about 1700, "John Wickleffs translation, performed by him anno Domini, 1383.—This copy will give forty pounds."

The books of the Old and New Testament, in the more recent translation. The margins have frequent glosses in the original hand, and a few brief and explanatory notes written about 1500. The Old Testament has no prologues except to Isaiah and Baruch. It is preceded by a Table of the epistles and gospels throughout the year. At the end of this, "And euere thanke we oure lord eendeles in trinite." After the Apocalypse, in rubric, "Here endith the Bible; Jhesu, helpe us, for we ben feble." The text and orthography agree very remarkably with the Arundel Ms. 104.

119. Em. Coll. 1. 2. 13, (102). Vellum, small 4°., 2 cols., written about the commencement of the xv. cent.

The books of the New Testament, in the later version, with the usual prologues. It is preceded by a Table of the "gospels pistlis and lessouns that ben red in chirchis bi al the yer," in two parts. After the first part, the names of the books of the New Testament with the number of the chapters in each; the second part, comprising the proper sanctorum, is in the form of a kalendar. In the lower margin of the page containing February, occurs this note by the same hand as the calendar, "Thus these lettres failen on lepe ȝeres in alle tymes. This was writen in the ȝer of g sundai next after lepeȝeer of b in the ȝeer of the Lord m°.ccc°.lxxxxvij." It is doubtful, whether the table is in the same hand with the body of the Ms. At the end, in a modern hand, "John Wickliffes translation of the N. T. finished A. D. 1383, and this copy was written A. D. 1397, and is valued at ten pounds." The quotations in the table are from the later version.

120. Em. Coll. 1. 4. 33, formerly 1. 2. 32. Very thin vellum, in 16°., 2 cols., written about the middle of the xv. cent.; the last leaf of the Apocalypse, and two in St. Matthew, chaps. ix. x., have been restored by a hand of the xvi. cent., and a few leaves are deficient; on the recto of the third fly leaf "Thomas Ken," and on the opposite verso, in the same hand, "ex dono Thome Hughes de Lincolnes Inne Armigeri, fratris mei charissimi, 17 Sep." On the first fly leaf, "G. S. Archiep. Cantuar. legavit collegio Emman. Cantab."

A Table of the lessons, etc., after the use of Salisbury, occupying 14 leaves. On the verso of the following leaf, in the same hand which supplied the lost leaves, 14 verses, beginning, "Thou art a mirror that doest faire inclose," etc.—The books of the New Testament, including the spurious Epistle to the Laodiceans, in the later version, with the usual, and many additional prologues, for which last, see vol. iv. p. 681^{b}. Many of the leaves containing these prologues have been mutilated.

JESUS COLLEGE.

121. Jes. Coll. Q. Δ. 6. Vellum, small thick 4°., 2 cols., written about 1430. From memoranda in the Ms. it appears to have been the property of Wm. Cottrell, who left it in 1576 to Edmund Grindal, Fellow of Pembroke Hall, afterwards Abp. of Canterbury. It subsequently belonged to David Moris, alias Hanmer, preceptor of the eldest son of Sir Will. Cecil, whose only son John Moris, alias Hanmer, gave it in 1594 to Edw. Hughes, Fellow of Jesus, who presented it to the college; his letter of presentation is dated "Sueniæ juxta Oswestriam Salopiæ, calend. Februarii 1594." On the top of the first fly leaf is written in a hand of xvi. cent. "Rd. Markerston."

The New Testament, with the spurious Epistle to the Laodiceans, and the usual prologues. It is preceded by 1. a very full Table of matters of the canonical books of the New Testament, and 2. a Table of the lessons, epistles, and gospels after the use of Salisbury throughout the year, with five other lessons not in that use. At the end are the lessons and epistles of the Old Testament, also after the use of Salisbury, with the five other lessons not of that use. All in the later version. It was from this Ms. that Lewis printed his first text of the Epistle to the Laodiceans.

122. Jes. Coll. Q. B. 13. It contains several Mss., "ex dono M^{ri}. Man. Coll. Soc. Jan. 26. 1685." The third in order is in 4°. on thick, woolly, rubbed vellum; written by two hands, the first before 1400, and the second not much later.

The Gospels of Matthew, Mark, and Luke. The first six chapters are of the earlier version and by the first hand, but have been corrected to the later by notes in the margin by the second hand, which has also supplied the prologue to Matthew and the remainder of the Ms. This prologue has the additional paragraph found in Ll. 1. 13. of the Cambridge University Library. The Ms. is imperfect and ends in Lk. ix. 24.

MAGDALEN COLLEGE.

123. Pepys. 1603, (6752). Thick vellum, small 4°., 2 cols., written about 1430; supplied in the first and last leaves, and other places, by a more modern hand.

The books of the Old Testament from Genesis to Ruth inclusive, in the more recent version, with occasional glosses in the margin.

124. Pepys. 15, 16, (6750). Two volumes, thin vellum, in 16°., written in the year 1437.

The four Gospels, at the end of which are: 1. a Kalendar, with notes of remarkable events, "The deere ȝeer, 1315, The greete deeth, 1350, The romoure, 1381, The erthe grone, 1382, The rumoure of lordis, 1387;" 2. a Table of the moveable feasts; 3. a Table of the number of books in the Bible; 4. a Table of the lessons, etc. Then, in the second volume, the other books of the New Testament, all in the later version, no prologues. At the end of the first volume this note, "Whanne the ȝeeris were of the makinge of the worlde 6681, and whanne the ȝeers of our (Lord) Jhesu Crist were of his incarnacioun 1437, tho was this book written."

125. Pepys. 2073, (6751). Vellum, small folio, 2 cols., written about 1440. It has at the end these notes, "Praye for the soll of Sir Wyllm. Weston, lorde of Senct Johns Jerusalem in England, the which lord desessithe the vjth daye of Maye in the yere of our Lord God 1540, of whos soll Jhu. haue marcy," etc.—"This booke was gyven me Edm. Randolph xxiij. die Marcij 1607, by my frend Sir Roberte Cotton knighte;" the names "Edmond Herenden" and "Thomas Bache" also occur in hands of the XVI. cent.

The books of the New Testament in the later version, with prologues. It has the Epistle to the Laodiceans, but without the prologue, in a peculiar translation, found only in this Ms., and printed vol. iv. p. 438. At the end of the Ms. "the lessouns and pistlis of the olde lawe, that ben red in the chirche in al the ȝeer after the vss of Salisburi," followed by 1. "othere lessouns," five in number, "of the olde lawe that ben not red after the vss of Salisburi;" and 2. a Table of the lessons, epistles, and gospels.—Erratum. The references made to this Ms. (marked w) in the Prologue to the Epistle to the Laodiceans, vol. iv. p. 438, should be omitted.

126. Magd. Coll. L. 5, 19. Vellum, small 4°., pp. 12, and 428, written probably before 1420, on the lower margin of a leaf of the Kalendar is written "Robert Gosnelle," in a hand of XVI. cent.

The New Testament, with the usual prologues, in the early version, excepting the Gospel of John and the prologues of the last three Gospels, which are of the later; the prologue to the Catholic Epistles is by error placed before the 1 Ep. of Peter. The Ms. is defective from Rom. xiv. 16 to 1 Cor. v. 2. The text presents many variations from the ordinary copies, and omits most of the glosses. The prologue to 1 Timothy differs from that in any other Ms., and has been printed vol. iv. p. 453. Prefixed to the volume is by a different hand, an ecclesiastical Kalendar in Latin. At the end of the volume, a short passage from St. Bernard against the vices of the higher clergy, beginning "Miror de prelatis." On the fly leaf at the commencement are some notes in the handwriting of Dr. Daniel Waterland as to the authors of the Wycliffite versions.

SIDNEY SUSSEX COLLEGE.

127. Sidn. Coll. Δ. 5. 14, formerly K. 5. 14, (761). Vellum, large 4°., written in the early part of the XV. cent.

The New Testament, in the early version, with prologues in the latter. Prefixed is a Table of the lessons, etc., the quotations in which agree generally, but not entirely with the early text. The first leaf of this table is wanting. At the end of the Apocalypse "the lessouns of the olde lawe that ben rad in the churche," filling about 31 leaves. These lessons present considerable variations from the printed text of the early version.

ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE.

128. St John's Coll. E. 13. Vellum, small 4°., 2 cols., written about 1440; presented in 1635 by Oliver Daud, a fellow of the college.

The Epistles of St. Paul, Acts, Catholic Epistles and Apocalypse, with the usual prologues, in the later version. Prefixed is "a kalender of pistles that ben rad in the chirch bi al the ere."

129. St. John's Coll. E. 14. Vellum, 12°., 2 cols., written about 1450, the first leaves are injured; presented by Edward Powell of this college. It belonged in the XV. cent. to Clement Ridley, "seruien' reverendi in domino domini Roberti Sturtone."

The Psalms, Canticles of the Church, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Song of Songs, Wisdom, and Ecclesiasticus, without prologues, and in the later version. A few glosses, such as occur usually in the margin, are inserted in the text.

130. St. John's Coll. G. 26. Vellum, small 4°., 2 cols., written about 1420.

The books of Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Song of Songs, Wisdom, and Ecclesiasticus, without prologues, in the more recent version; and at the end, in a later hand, the book of Tobit.

131. St. John's Coll. N. 4. Vellum, 12°., single cols., written about 1450; presented by William Lynge, M. A. Rector of St. Vigors in Fulburne, Cambridgeshire April 23, 1688.

The four Gospels, of the later version, with the usual prologues.

132. St. John's Coll. E. 18. Vellum, 12°., coarsely written in the middle of XV. cent.

The Gospel of St. John, with the usual prologue, in the later version. Then follow the Articles of belief and some Prayers.

TRINITY COLLEGE.

133. Trin. Coll. B. II. 8, (205). Vellum, small folio, 2 cols., written about 1430. On the covers are impressed the arms of Abp. Whitgift, impaled with the see, by whom probably the volume was presented to the college.

The Pentateuch, in the more recent version.

134. Trin. Coll. B. X. 7. Vellum, small folio, 2 cols., written about 1430. It belonged in April 1570 to Arthur Salwey, and was presented to the college by its Master, Thomas Nevile, Dean of Canterbury; imperfect at both extremes.

The New Testament, with the usual prologues, in the later version. It wants about five chapters of St. Matthew, and as much of the Apocalypse.

135. Trin. Coll. B. X. 20. Vellum, small 4°., 2 cols., written about 1430. The following notes of its possessors occur, "Liber Johannis Trussell, ex dono Tho. Holcrafte, militis, a°. 1608," "Sir John Haryngton," "Humfredus Fenne Coventr.," and "Trin. Coll. Cant. A. D. 1671, ex dono doctissimi doctoris Scattergood, hujus collegii quondam sacellani."

The New Testament, in the more recent version, with the usual prologues. It is preceded by a Kalendar in Latin, and at the end are: 1. a Table of matters, or contents of the chapters of the several books of the New Testament; 2. a Table or kalendar of the lessons, epistles, etc., and the lessons out of the old law, which, as well here as in the table, are taken from the earlier version; at the end of this Kalendar the following note in a hand of the XVII. cent., "Becket canonised 1176.—Wicliff translated some parte of S. Powles epistles, 1375.—Tindall translated the new testament 30 H. 8."

DURHAM.

BISHOP COSINS'S LIBRARY.

136. Durham, V. v. 1. Vellum, 8°., ff. 175, 2 cols., written at the commencement of the XV. cent. It belonged in 1617 to Thomas Maydwell; afterwards to Ryc. Baddeley, and in 1666 to the Rev. George Davenport, who gave it to the library.

The New Testament, in the earlier version, without prologues. At the end is a treatise intitled, "Heere bigynnen goode materes nedeful to be knowun;" beg. "Seint Austyn seith, whoso prechith the Gospel;" directed against false preachers, and the mendicant and conventual orders.

HEREFORD.

CATHEDRAL LIBRARY.

137. Heref. 206, (1798). Vellum, large folio, 2 cols., written about 1420; in parts much mutilated, torn and soiled. Probably presented by Dr. Robert Bennet, bishop of Hereford from 1602 to 1617, whose name occurs in a note partly destroyed, on the first leaf of the volume.

The books of the Old and New Testament, in the more recent translation, with prologues to Genesis, Joshua, 1 Kings, 1 Paral., Isaiah, Baruch, and the books of the New Testament. It commences with a Table to find the lessons, etc. Immediately after the 150th Psalm, a brief explanation of the first six Canticles of the Church. Then the names of the books of the Old Testament thus far, with the number of chapters in each. In the early books it has numerous marginal glosses: the textual glosses are everywhere carefully scored with red. A hand, about 1500, has made numerous small notes, both in Latin and English, sometimes merely to draw attention to particular passages, at other times to explain the translation; an example of this last kind is Ecclus. xl. 14, an unjust man shall be glad. Over against these words in the side margin is written, Sicut justus, and in the lower margin, "Sicut justus in aperiendo manus suas letabitur, prævaricatores in consummacione tabescent. These twey wordis, sicut justus, is not in sum Latyn book, it is sett forth with the text, and therfore me thinketh the Englis shude not be drawen with reed." The Ms. has many lacunæ, being defective from Gen. xxiv. 14 to xxviii. 17; II Kings xx. 10 to xxiii. 15; Job ix. 18 to xx. 26; Proverbs i. 1 to vi. 9; II Macc. xv. 37 to Mt. iv. 24; Mt. xxvii. 62 to Mk. iii. 8; II Cor. xi. 26 to Gal. iii. 22, and it ends in Apoc. ix. 17.

LINCOLN.

CATHEDRAL LIBRARY.

138. Linc. A. 2. 5. Vellum, 4°., 2 cols., written perhaps about 1430; it belonged about the end of XVII. cent. to John Walley.

The Epistles of St. Paul, from the Epistle to the Romans ii. 11, the Acts, Catholic Epistles, and the Apocalypse; in the later version, with the usual prologues.

WINCHESTER.

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE.

139. Winch. 2, (1339). Vellum, small 4°., XV. cent.

WORCESTER.

Cathedral Library.

140. Worc. 82, (926). Vellum, 4°., 2 cols., written about 1420. It formerly belonged to Dr. John Prideaux, bishop of Worcester. One or two leaves have been cut out.

The New Testament, in the later version, with the usual prologues. The Ms. commences with a Kalendar, followed by a Table of the lessons, etc. after the use of Salisbury, of which the last leaf alone remains; and then, in a different hand, by a rule to find the primes and Sunday letters, from the year 1380. At the end of the Ms. the Epistles and lessons of the old law, after the use of Salisbury, in the later version.

YORK.

Cathedral Library.

141. York xvi. N. 7. Vellum, 4°., 2 cols., written not much after 1400. At the commencement of the 1 Epistle to Thessalonians, on the side margin, in the handwriting of the Queen, "Elizabeth Regina;" in several places the name "Emmanuel Barnes," and at the end of the Table of lessons an inscription by him, on his presenting the volume, 1 Jan. 1587, to Tobias Matthew, dean of Durham, afterwards archbishop of York.

The New Testament, in the more recent version, with the usual prologues. It is preceded by a Kalendar of "lessouns, pistlis and gospels, that ben rad in the chirche thoru the ȝeer," imperfect at the commencement; and it is followed by the lessons and epistles of the Old Testament, in the later version.

142. York xvi. O. 1. Vellum, small 4°., 2 cols., written about 1420; at the end, in a scrawl of the xv. cent. "Chrystofer Baroders;" and on the reverse of the leaf concluding the table, "Elenor Bowes."

The New Testament, in the later version, with the usual prologues; preceded by a Table of the lessons, etc. according to the use of Salisbury.

MANCHESTER.

Chetham Library.

143. Cheth. 6723. Vellum, small 4°., 2 cols., written about 1430. On a fly leaf at the commencement, this note partially scored out, "Margret Elynghey.....Smyth, her owne book." It was given to the library by the Rev. John Clayton, M.A. in 1732.

The New Testament, in the later version, with the ordinary prologues. It is preceded by a Table of the lessons, etc. after the use of Salisbury.

NORWICH.

Corporation Library.

144. Norwich, 54. Vellum, in large folio, 2 cols., written probably before 1420; imperfect at the end; on verso of first fly leaf, "Liber Jacobi Boolene, manentis in Blicklingia" apparently Sir James Boleyn, who died in 1561.

The books of the Old Testament, from Genesis to Proverbs vii. 10, in the more recent version. Part of the last three leaves is torn away.

EDINBURGH.

Advocates' Library.

145. Adv. A. 6. 34. Vellum, thick 8°., 2 cols., ff. 278, written about the close of the xiv. cent. It formerly belonged to the library of Sir James Balfour, of Kinnaird, Lord Lyon, and was with it purchased for the Faculty of Advocates, 14 Dec. 1698. The volume is bound in russia, and on the back has the rose and thistle surmounted by a crown.

It commences with, "A general Kalender of the Newe Testament, to knowe gospels and pistels thurȝ out al the ȝer;" the quotations are from the early version. This is followed in the same hand, which is later than that of the body of the Ms., by the prologue to Matthew, which is of the later version. Then the four Gospels, Epistles of St. Paul, Acts, Catholic Epistles, and Apocalypse in the early version, with the usual prologues, except to Matthew. It is remarkable, that in this Ms. as well as in Egerton 618, Douce 369, and Trin. Coll. Dubl. A. 1. 10, a considerable portion of the prologue to the Romans is inserted in the middle of a sentence of that to the Gospel of Luke. From Romans to Titus inclusive, this copy has in the text numerous short glosses, in which, after the Epistle to the Galatians, Ms. Trin. Coll. Dubl. A. 1. 10, generally agrees, and continues the like to the end of Hebrews.

GLASGOW.

Hunterian Museum.

146. Hunter 167. Vellum, 12°., 2 cols., written about 1420.

The books of the New Testament, with the Epistle to the Laodiceans, and the usual prologues, in the later version.

147. Hunter, 168. Vellum, 12°., ff. 70.

The Gospel of St. Mark, in the later version. It is imperfect, ending in the beginning of chapter xiv.

148. Hunter, 173. Vellum, 12°.; formerly belonging to John Gale, of Oxford.

The Gospels of Matthew, Mark and Luke, in the later version.

DUBLIN.

TRINITY COLLEGE.

149. Dubl. A. 1. 5. Vellum, folio, 2 cols., written by two different hands, both of the xv. cent. On a slip of paper inserted, in a hand of the xvi. cent. "This ancient monyment of the holy scripture dothe show, how the Lord God in all ages and tymes wold haue his blessed woorde preserved for the comforte of his elect children and church in all tymes and ages, in despyte off Sathane, Antichrist, and all his enemyes, to ther vtter confucion and overthrow, that the wickett myghte have no excuse to plead yngnorance, that the wordes of our Saviour myght be verified on them, that they arred by cause they did not know the Scripture, as he testifyeth in the gospell of St. John."

The books of the Old Testament, from Proverbs to II Maccabees inclusive, in the later translation. Next follows a Table of the books, from Proverbs to Maccabees, shewing the folio on which they commence. Then the books of the New Testament, also in the later translation, with the usual prologues. At the end of the Apocalypse, "Here endith the bible; Jhesu, helpe us, for we ben feble." It is followed by 1. a Table of the books of the New Testament, with the folio on which each begins; 2. a Table to find the lessons, etc.; imperfect. The Ms. is defective from Eccles. ix. 11 to Song of S. viii. 1; from Ecclus. xxvi. 20 to xxix. 18; and from Malach. ii. 16 to 1 Macc. v. 20; and from Acts xxiv. 5 to xxv. 26.

150. Dubl. A. 1. 9. Vellum, small folio, 2 cols., written before 1400.

The books of the Old Testament, from Genesis to Job inclusive, in the early version, with the usual prologues, and also at the end those to the Psalms. The church lessons are noted in the margin.

151. Dubl. A. 1. 10. Vellum, in small folio, 2 cols., written towards the end of XIV. cent.

On the verso of the first fly leaf, and on the verso of the last leaf, are numerous entries by Sir Henry Gate, Kt., of the birth and baptism of his children, between 1544 and 1555. These entries have been printed by Sir F. Madden, in the Collectanea Topographica, vol. i. p. 396. On the recto of the second fly leaf is written in a hand of the XVII. cent. the following note, "The author of this translation seemeth to have beene John Purvay, as Mr. Fox calleth him, both by the verse in the beginning, and the character in the end of the Apocalipse, thus formed ℘: of the care and paines taken therein, see toward the latter end of the Prologue to all the bookes of the Bible, which is set in the end of the booke. It should appeare thereby, that he translated the whole Bible, and made a glose on the hard places, as namely, upon Job and the greater prophets: he doth mention it fol. 23 and 24. Such a Bible there is in the library of Emmanuell Colledge in Cambridge, but whether the same translation with this or no, I have not yet compared. ¶ After this Prologue there followeth another to the Psalter, fol. 34; and fol. 38 an apology of a certaine Priest, Curate of Chedingfold, to the Cardinal of Winchester, which was Henry Beauford; but what the author's name was, I find not. These writings do shew that in the mids of the darknes and cruell persecution of those tymes God euer had some which contested against those corruptions from which in this our age it hath pleased him to reforme his church. Blessed be his holy name for euer and euer. Amen." What follows on the remainder of this fly leaf, from which a portion of the lower part has been cut off, appears to be in the hand of Michael Seroien, namely, 1. The motto, "Moriens vive," and below, a name which has been erased; 2. This acrostich:—

"Meque patresque dedit florens Antuerpia cineS, Instruxit schola clara Louanii pectus inermE.
Christo doctori, secum quem Papa MagisteR
Hactenus abstulerat, restaurat Gallia summO; Armaque ibi Italiamque, et te, Germania, vidI.
Excipit et gremio fessum fouet Anglia mollE; Lucta, labor, curæ versant, dum diuido semeN."

On the lower margin of the recto of the next or third leaf is the following note;—"Ex dono clarissimæ Dominæ Franciscæ Burgh, Baronissæ, sum Michaelis Seroien P. Æ. Æ. . . apud Lambeth Marshe Londini, idibus Maij 1593." The third leaf commences with the following line in rubric, and without doubt in the hand of John Purvey himself, Christus homo factus, J. P. prosperet actus. There succeeds in the same hand, a brief harmony of the Gospels in three divisions, the first with the marginal rubrics, Maria, Johannes Baptista, Apostolorum Discipuli; the second is headed, De miraculis Christi; and the third, De parabolis Christi. It begins:—

		Mt.	Mr.	Luc.	Joh.
Maria	Concepit et abiit in montana			1
	Inuenta est in utero habens	1
	Fugit in Egiptum et reuersa est Nazareht	2
	Peperit filium	1		2

Then follow, on the verso of the next leaf, in the same hand, the heads of a discourse, with this rubric, "Sermo Doctor. Curteyse, Dominica in purificatione. Christus assistens pontifex per proprium sanguinem introivit in (sancta)." Next, on the following seven leaves, and ending on the recto of the eighth, a Table of the lessons, epistles and gospels, throughout the year; the quotations in which are from the early version. This Table is in the same hand with the bulk of the Ms. Then, in Purvey's hand, the prologues, from the later version, of Mark, Luke, John, and the Apocalypse. All that has preceded, is written in a single column across the page; what succeeds is in double columns. The books of the New Testament, in the early version, thus: Matthew, with the prologue of the early version, the remaining Gospels without prologues; the Acts, with the prologue of the later version prefixed in Purvey's hand; the Catholic Epistles, with the prologue of the later version in the same hand; blank spaces are left for prologues to each of the last six. At the end of Jude, in Purvey's hand, this note, "Deficit prologus, et x^m. capitula." The verso commences with the eleventh chapter of the Epistle to the Romans; this page has been pasted to the recto of the succeeding leaf, left blank for that purpose, on which and the next six leaves are contained the ten, and part of the eleventh, chapters, omitted, as it seems, by the original scribe. The writing, in a small cursive character, is the same with that of the General Prologue, etc. at the end of the Apocalypse, and appears to be contemporary with Purvey's. On the verso of the first inserted leaf, "¶ Jerome in his prolog on this epistle seith alle this." The prologue, however, is not given on the preceding page. Then, the Epistle to the Romans, as far as xi. 20 in the later, the rest in the early version; I Cor., with the prologue in Purvey's hand, of the later version; II Cor., with the prologue, in the same hand, and of the same version; Galatians, with the prologue by the original scribe, and in the early version; Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, I and II Thessalonians, I and II Timothy, Titus, Philemon, and Hebrews, with the prologues before each, supplied by Purvey, in the later version; the Apocalypse, without a prologue. Another hand, in an upright, even and close character, has supplied a leaf in Luke, c. vii. 13—viii. 2, and two in the Apocalypse, c. xvi. 17—xix. 16; these insertions are in the later version. At the end of the Apocalypse, in the lower margin, is this monogram, . What follows, to the end of the volume, is written by the same hand which supplied the chapters in the epistle to the Romans. The rubrics are partly in the handwriting of Purvey, who has also corrected the text, both in the margin and between the lines; the punctuation is also frequently by the same. The columns in this last part, as likewise in the insertion in Romans, are considerably longer than in the original volume, and it has also a separate paging, though not continued to the end. Its contents are, 1. "A prolog for alle the bookis of the bible of the oolde Testament."—2. Remarks in the nature of a Prologue on the Psalter, (printed from this Ms. vol. i. pp. 37—40). The paragraph, p. 39, beg. "This book comprehendith——loue of enemies," is repeated in the Ms. at the end of these remarks.—3. The paragraph at the beginning of cap. xii. of the General Prologue, p. 43, beg. "But it is to wite——haue in heuene."—4. A prayer, beg. "Lord Jhesu Crist, delyuerer of soulis."—5. A Summary of Christian belief, in 12 articles, beg. "The first article of oure bileue——sacramentis of hooli chirche."—6. Observations on the concluding parts of St. Matthew and St. Mark's Gospels, beg. "And the elleuene——worldis of worldis. Amen."—7. A long letter in Latin to Cardinal Beaufort, when Bp. of Winchester, by a priest, curate of Chedynfolde, com. Surr., giving a profession of his faith, in answer to accusations brought against him concerning the sacraments, particularly that of the eucharist, pilgrimages, and images of the saints.—Lastly, The lessons and pisteles of the olde lawe, that ben redde in the chirche by alle the ȝere. This rubric is in Purvey's hand, and the lessons are of the later version. Purvey's orthography is peculiar, writing in the 3 p. sing. pr. t. comfortet, schewet, passyt, vnderminet, writet, discrivet, ȝevet, comeht, sendyht, beryht, spekyht;—deht for death, trewht for truth, nat for not, hit for it, yen for eyes, Jues for Jews; lijȝht, sowȝht, ryȝhtwisnes, for light, sought and righteousness. What Purvey has written in this book, at least in the latter part of it, must have been inserted in or after 1427, in which year Henry Beaufort became a cardinal.

152. Dubl. D. 5, 12. Paper, 4°., transcribed in 1569 from an old Ms. given by Leonard Pilkington, D. D., prebendary of Durham, to Sir Thomas Gargarave, Kt., according to a note in Leo. Pilkington's hand, which states that "the fyrst coppye thereof was found in Fotheringayc Colledge, at the suppression thereof."

The New Testament, in the later version.

WOLFENBUTTEL.

153. Ducal Library, Aug. A. 2. Vellum, folio, 2 cols., ff. 412, written at the beginning of the xv. cent. This volume belonged at the beginning of the xvii. cent. to Lord Lumley, whose autograph is in the lower margin of fol. 7, and about the middle of the same century it is stated to have been purchased in England by Augustus, Duke of Brunswick, for his library.

The books of the Old and New Testament, of the earlier version, with the usual prologues. Prefixed is a Table of lessons, etc., the texts of which are also of the early version. In the New Testament, the Catholic Epistles precede the Deeds of Apostles. Six leaves have been cut out of this copy, viz., from IV Kings xxiv. 5 to I Par. i. 9; I Esdr. ix. 10 to II Esdr. iii. 5; from end of Judith to Esther iii. 12; part of the prologue of Job to iii. 10; and from beginning of Proverbs to ii. 9.

PRIVATE LIBRARIES.

Sir Peregrine Acland, Bart.

154. Acland. Vellum, small folio, 2 cols., written about 1410, or perhaps earlier. On the first fly leaf, "This is my wiues booke, G. Palmer;" on the second, "This Bible I found in my dear Father S^{r} Will Morley's studdy, w^{ch} Book I believe was his great grand Father's Mr. J. Morley. M. Derby, 1713." At the end of the volume, in various hands, all of the XVI. cent., are pedigrees of Mery and of Bowyer, the first from Thomas Mery of Hatfield, and the other from Richard Bowyer of Petworth, both about the time of Edward IV., with some curious notes regarding his family, by Thomas Bowyer of the Middle Temple, about 1588. Then follows this memorandum, in the writing of G. Palmer, "This translation of the bible, which by tradition is reported to have been Wickliffe's own booke, seems by the writeing and English to have been written in the beginning of the reign of Hen. 4th.; it was in the time of Edw. 4th. the possession of Richard Mery of Hatfield, and from him descended to his grand daughter Joan marryed to Thomas Bowyer, whose several descendants (as appears by the memorials of themselves herein written) kept it till the beginning of K. James the first's reign; whether by purchase or gift I cannot tell, but on the decay of that family of Bowyer, it was their neighbours S^{r} John Morley of Halvenehed in Sussex, my wives great Grandfather, the Grandchild and Heiresse General of which S^{r} John Morley, the present Countess of Derby, gave it to my wife, her nighest relation, to be by her kept and transmitted to her posterity, as an Heirloom, and remembrance of the great friendship and kindnesse she has always borne her. G. Palmer—Fairfield. Septemb^{r} 25, 1723."

The books of the Old and New Testament, in the later version, with occasional marginal glosses. In the Old Testament, Isaiah and Baruch are the only books which have prologues. The hooks of the New Testament have the usual prologues, with the exception of the Epistle to the Galatians, to which no less than four are prefixed; the first agreeing with that printed in vol. iv. p. 396; for the others, see vol. iv. p. 688^{b}. The book of Genesis is preceded by the General Prologue, "Fyue and twenti bookis —— at the laste, Amen;" and by a Table "to fynde the lessouns, pistlis, and gospels that ben rad bi al the 3eer in hooly chirche." Before the prologue to the Apocalypse is a note, apparently in Bale's handwriting, "Hunc prologum Gilb. Porretani in Apoc^{n}. transtulit Joannes Wiclevus in Anglicum sermonem."

MRS. ALLANSON, OF BROUGHTON IN FLINTSHIRE.

155. Allanson. Vellum, folio, 2 cols., written early in the XV. cent. The original scribe has made numerous mistakes, omitting occasionally several verses together, as in Jer. l. 3—13. A second scribe appears to have completed the volume, commencing at 1 Macc. ix. The names of "T. Marowe" and "Thomas Fytton" occur, both in writing of the XVI. cent.

The books of the Old Testament from Genesis to II Maccabees inclusive, in the early version, with the usual prologues to Genesis, Joshua, 1 Kings, 1 Paral., II Paral., 1 Esdras, Tobit, Judith, Esther, Job, Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Wisdom, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Baruch. A blank space of about a column in extent is left between Joel and Amos, and at the commencement in the margin is written, The prologe in Amos.

THE EARL OF ASHBURNHAM.

156. Ashburnham, 1. Vellum, large 4°., 2 cols., written about 1400. On the upper margin of the first leaf is written, "Ed. Reynolds, ex dono D. Gulielmi Simonson, coll. Merton socii." On the verso of the last leaf is a curious note, stating that on Midlent Sunday 8 Henr. VIII. the book was presented by Dame Anne Danvers, widow of Sir Will. Danvers, to the Master Confessor and brethren of Sion. It recently belonged to M^{r}. Lea Wilson.

The four Gospels, Acts, Catholic Epistles, Epistles of St. Paul, and Apocalypse, without prologues, in the earlier version. The New Testament was printed from this Ms., and published by Mr. Pickering, in 1848. 4°.

157. Ashburnham, 2. Vellum, 4°., 2 cols., written in the year 1444. A leaf of the original Ms. is lost, containing Matt. chap. i., and has been supplied by a hand of XVI. cent. On the recto of the first vellum leaf is this note, "25 Jan. 1692. This booke was shewn to Mr. W^{m}. Fox at his examination on the behalfe of John Cullum, at the suit of Tomas Shaftoe in the Court of Exchequer before me, John Powell." It was presented in 1834 by Antony Merry to the Rev. Wilmot Marsh of Bangor, and obtained after his sale in 1847 by the Earl of Ashburnham.

A Kalendar in English; a Table to find Easter from 1448 to 1520; a Table to find the lessons, etc., after the use of Salisbury. The books of the New Testament, in the later version, with the usual prologues. The Epistle to the Laodiceans is inserted by another and rather later hand. At the end of the Apocalypse is added in red by a different hand from that of the rubricator of the Ms., Here endith the Apocalipis. anno dñi m°. ccc°. xliiij°. (1444). After this, by the hand which supplied the Epistle to the Laodiceans, is added the longer prologue to the Epistle to the Romans. Then follow the lessons, etc. out of the Old Testament; the first leaf of these is lost.

158. Ashburnham, 3. Vellum, small 4°., 2 cols., written about 1430. On one of the first fly leaves, "M. Edgcombs bqok," with the name "Carryle," and date 1597. 29 July; and on the verso of the last fly leaf, "John Picard, Pastour of Pluckleye, 1598, 28 of June, and I have bene at Pluckleye thes 30 yeares," etc. On the verso of the second fly leaf at the end is a note, in a hand of the xv. cent., now almost erased, which appears to read, "A lytel boke of .... viij l. vj. s. viij. d. and hit .... a holy man .... was over seyne, and redd be Doctor Thomas Ebb .. all and Doctor Ryve .... my modir bought hit." In the present century it belonged to the rev. Dr. Barrett of Trin. Coll. Dublin, to H. R. H. the Duke of Sussex, and in 1844 to Mr. Lea Wilson.

The New Testament, in the later version, with the usual prologues. St. Matthew has two additional prologues, which were privately printed from this Ms. by Dr. Barrett. The first is part of that which properly belongs to Wycliffe's Commentary on that Gospel (see Ms. Laud 235). Prefixed is a Table of the lessons, etc. after the use of Salisbury. This Ms. formed the text printed by Bagster in his Hexapla, 4°., 1841.

159. Ashburnham, 4. Vellum, small 4°., 2 cols., written perhaps about 1420. It belonged to Mr. Lea Wilson.

The books of the New Testament in the following order, Gospels, Apocalypse, Epistles of St. Paul, Acts, and Catholic Epistles, in the later version, with the usual prologues. It has some peculiar readings, which often proceed from a second hand.

160. Ashburnham, 5. Vellum, 8°., 2 cols. It previously belonged to W. D. Higgs, and at his sale in 1830, lot 719, was purchased by Mr. Wilks, and re-sold in 1847.

The books of the New Testament, with the usual prologues, in the later version. Imperfect at the end, breaking off in 1 Cor. chap. vii.

161. Ashburnham, 6. Thick strong vellum, 16°., written not later than 1400; in a hand of XVIII. cent. this note, "Tho. Miles, the gift of Mr. Dyer." It belonged to Mr. Lea Wilson.

The Acts of the Apostles, with the usual prologue. It is in the more recent version, except from chap. vii. 31 to x. 6, which portion is of the early version.

THOMAS BANISTER, ESQ., OF THE INNER TEMPLE.

162. Banister. Vellum, small folio, 2 cols., pp. 6 and 276, written perhaps about 1390. The first three leaves containing the Kalendar, with the lessons inserted, are by a different scribe, though not much, if at all, later than the body of the Ms. At the bottom of the first page in a hand of xv. cent., "a uous me ly, Gloucestre," probably the Duke of Gloucester afterwards Rich. III. On the verso of the last leaf are several names scrawled in a hand of about 1500, and among them, "John Thomas of Westfyrle," and below is the commencement of a writ temp. Henr. IV. to the sheriff of Sussex. A title has been prefixed to the vol. by a hand of the early part of the XVIII. cent., ascribing the translation to John Wycliffe, in 1371. On a fly leaf before the lessons, in a hand of the earlier part of the XVIII. cent. is a note containing a reference to Lewis' edition, published in 1731.

The books of the New Testament, in the earlier version, with the usual prologues. A second hand has gone over the Ms. and made corrections. The readings very often agree with the Ms. Christ Ch. Oxf. E. 4. The orthography is remarkable, the participles present terminate in ende or ande; it reads, a noen, oen, noen for anon, one, none; coete, coestis, boet, for coat, coast, boat; boȝ, thoȝ for bough, through; kneȝ for knew; seewȝ for sowed; sloȝ for slew; saȝ for saw; often has the 2 p. pl. imp. terminating in eth; retains the n of the infinitive; has k for c, as kum, kuntree, kumpanyes, kuppe, and omits the vowel after w, as wrthi, wrd, wrshipen.

DR. CARDWELL, PRINCIPAL OF ST. ALBAN HALL, OXFORD.

163. Cardwell. Very thin vellum, small 16°., 2 cols., written about 1430—1440; imperfect at both extremes; on the sides, between the initials I. L., are impressed the royal arms, France and England, quarterly, surmounted by a crown.

The books of the New Testament, in the more recent version, with the usual prologues, and two to the Epistle to the Romans. The spurious Epistle to the Laodiceans is inserted after that to the Colossians. The Ms. begins in Mt. iii. 5 and ends in Apoc. xvii. 14. It is also defective in one or two other places.

Very Rev. Will. Conybeare, Dean of Llandaff.

164. Conybeare. Thin vellum, small 4°., 2 cols., written about 1420. It appears from the signature to have belonged formerly to Sir Ra. Bosvile of Braborne, and subsequently came to the Rev. John Craige, who gave it to Sir Edw. Dering of Surrenden Dering, Bt. 1637. See Lewis' New Test. fol. 1731, p. 105. At the sale of the Dering Library in 1810, it was purchased by the Rev. J. J. Conybeare.

The New Testament, of the later version, with the usual prologues. At the end were added, now forming a separate volume, the lessons and epistles of the old law, which generally but not uniformly, agree with the later version. This Ms. was lent to Lewis, who used the text for the Epistles, Acts, and Apocalypse of his edition. When Lewis saw the Ms. it contained also a Table of the epistles and gospels, which was probably taken out at the time the volume was rebound.

Sir George Dashwood, Bart.

165. Dashwood. Paper, 4°., containing a transcript of the New Testament, in the earlier version, made by one R. Ro. about the beginning of the xvii. cent.

Sir David Dundas, H. M. Judge Advocate.

166. Dundas. Vellum, small 4°., written perhaps about 1440. It belonged to Thomas Falconer of Chester, and afterwards to the Rev. Thomas Falconer of Bath. On the last leaf is a note by "Austyn Fyschmonger," and the date m. cccc. lvij.

The Epistles of St. Paul, in the later version, with the usual prologues.

Rev. Charles Fletcher, of Southwell, Co. Notts.

167. Fletcher. Vellum, 8°., written about 1430: imperfect at both extremes, and in other places. It was sold with his library in 1850, lot 204.

A portion of the New Testament, in the later version, commencing in the prologue to the Epistle to Romans chap. 1, and ending in Apoc. chap. xv. 3.

Sir Thomas Phillipps, Bart.

168. Phillipps, 9302. Vellum, small folio, 2 cols., written before 1400. It belonged to "W. Herbert 17th March, 1766," then to Gough; and at his sale in 1810 was purchased by Rev. H. H. Baber.

The Gospels without prologues, and the Epistles of St. Paul, with the usual prologues, in the earlier version. A second hand has altered the text in various places. The alterations generally agree with the readings of Magd. Coll. Cambr. L. 5. 19, Brit. Mus. Addl. 11,858, and New Coll. 67. It begins with Mt. iii. 4, and ends in 1 Tim. i. 15. It is defective from Rom. ix. 22 to 1 Cor. i. 23; and much torn and mutilated, particularly in the margins, from which the blank vellum has been cut off, and with it sometimes a letter or two of the text. It has some singular readings, as 1 Cor. vi. 20, glorifie ȝe and glorye ȝe; xiii. 6, of noon; xiv. 24, prophecieden. The scribe not unfrequently makes gross errors.

Rev. Daniel Rock, D. D.

169. Rock. Vellum, 4°., 2 cols., written about 1430. It belonged in the xvi. cent. to "Walter Mersche, in Mylkstrete."

The New Testament, in the later version, with the usual prologues. Prefixed is a Table of lessons after the use of Salisbury, in a different but coeval hand; and at the end is a Table of matters filling 13 pages, which is partly the same with, but much less full than, Ms. Egerton 1165. Then follow the lessons at length out of the old law, also of the later version. A leaf is wanting at the commencement of the Gospel of Matthew, to ch. i. 25; another from Luke ch. xxiv. 51 to John i. 29; and a third at the beginning of Deeds of the Apostles, to ch. ii. 2.

Rev. J. H. Todd, D.D., of Trin. Coll. Dublin.

170. Todd. Vellum, small 4°., 2 cols., of the xv. cent.

The Apocalypse, imperfect at the beginning and end. It commences with part of the prologue, and ends in ch. xxii. 19.

PROLOGUE.

Here bygynneth a prolog for alle the bokis of the Bible of the oolde testament [a].

CAP. I.

FYUE and twenty bookis of the olde testament ben bookis of feith, and fulli bookis of holy writ; the first is Genesis, the ij. is[b] Exodi[c], the iij. is[b] Leuitici[d], the iiij. is[b] Numeri, and[e] the v. is[b] Deutronomye; and these fyue ben the bookis of Moises, whiche[f] ben clepid propurly the lawe; the vj. book[g] is[gg] Josue, the vij. book[h] is Judicum, that enclosith the story of Ruth; the viij. book[h], ix.[i] x.[k] and[l] xj.[m] and[l] xij.[n] and xiij.[o] ben the foure bookis of Kyngis and twey[p] bookis of Paralipominon; the xiiij. book is Esdre, that comprehendeth Neemye, and al is o bok anentis Ebreyes, as Jerom seith, but anentis Grekis and Latyns these ben twey bookis; and[q] the xv. is Hester, the xvj. is Joob, the xvij. is the Sauter; the xviij. book[r], xix.[s] and[r] xx.[t] ben the[r] iij.[u] bookis of Salamon; the first is Prouerbis, either Parablis, the ij. is[w] Eclesiastes, and the iij. is[x] Songis[y] of Songis; the xxi. book[x], xxij. xxiij. and[xx] xxiiij. ben the foure grete prophetis; Isaie is the first, Jeremye is the ij. Ezechiel is the iij. and Daniel is the fourth; the[z] xxv. book is o[a] book of xij. smale prophetis; Osee 'is the first[b], Joel 'is the ij.[b] Amos 'is the iij.[c] Abdie[d] 'is the iiij.[b] Jonas 'is the fyuethe[e], and[f] Michee 'is the vj.[b] Naum 'is the vij.[b] Abacuk 'is the viij.[b] Sofonye 'is the ix.[b] Aggeye 'is the x.[b] Sacharie 'is the xi.[b] and[g] Malachie 'is the xij. ; and alle these xij. smale prophetis ben o book, and in this ordre. And what euer book in the olde testament is 'out of[i] these fyue and twenty byfore[k] seid, shal be set among apocrifa, that is, with outen autorite of bileue; therfore the book of Wisdom and Eclesiastici[l] and Judith and Tobie be[m] not of bileue. The first book of Machabeies was founden write[n] in Ebreu, and the ij. book of Machabeyes was writen first in Grek. Jerom seith al this sentence in the prologe on the first book of Kyngis. Also[o] the book of Baruc and the pistle of Jeremye ben not of the[p] autorite of the bible anentis Ebreyes, ne[q] the preyer of Manasses, as[r] Jerom witnessith, and 'how mich of[s] the book of Hester and of[t] Daniel is of autorite anentis Ebreyes, and in Ebreu lettre, it is told in the same bookis by[u] Jerom hym self; netheles Jerom, in suynge Ebreyes, comprehendith alle these[w] bookis in xxij.; for Ebreies maken oo book of the first and ij.[x] book of Kyngis, and clepen it Samuel, and thei maken oo book of the iij. and iiij.[y] book of Kyngis, and clepen it Malachym, and thei comprehenden in oo book the ij. bookis of Paralipominon. But certis, litel charge is of this rikenyng, whether the[z] bookis of Kyngis ben noumbred foure, as Latyns doen, either tweyn, as Ebreies doen. Also litel charge is, whether Paralipominon be departid in ij. bookis, as Latyns vsen[a], either[b] be oo book aloone, as Ebreis doen[c]; and so of the first book of Esdras and of[d] Neemye, litel charge is, whether thei ben tweyne, as Latyns and Grekis vsen, 'other oon[e] aloone, as Ebreyes vsen. Netheles it semeth, that Latyns and Grekis han more reson in this rikenyng than Ebreies han, but hou euer these bookis ben noumbrid, alle these ben of autorite of bileue, either of cristen feith. Thanne if the first book of Esdre and the book of Neemye ben noumbrid for tweyne, as Grekis and Latyns vsen, and if men taken Judith for a book of holy Scripture, as the general congregacioun of clergie dide at the[f] Seyne of Nicene, as Jerom witnessith in the prologe on[g] Judith, thanne in the olde testament ben xxvij. bookis of bileue. Also Eclesiastici[h] was writen in Ebreu, and the book of Wisdom is not anentis Ebreies, but sowneth[i] Grek eloquence, and summe olde writers affermen, that the Jew Filo made it. Therfore as holy chirche redith Judith and Tobie and the bookis of Machabeies, but resceyueth[k] not tho among holy Scripturis[l], so the chirche redith[m] these ij.[n] bookis Eclesiastici[o] and Sapience to edifying of the peple, not[p] to conferme the autorite of techingis of holy[q] chirche; Jerom seith this pleynly in the prologe on[r] Prouerbis[s]. Also Jerom translatide the first book of Esdre and Neemye, and biddith that no man delite in the[t] dremis of the iij. and iiij[u]. book of Esdre that ben apocrifa, that is, not of autorite of bileue; for anentis Ebreies the wordis of Esdre and of[w] Neemye ben driuen in to o book; 'and the bookis[x] of the olde testament, that ben not anentis Ebreies, and ben not of the noumbre of holy writ[y], owen to be cast fer awey; Jerom seith this in the prolog of[z] Esdre. And therfore Y translatide not the thridde neither[a] the fourthe book of Esdre, that ben apocrifa; but onely the first, and of Neemye, that ben rikened for twey bookis anentis Grekis and Latyns, and ben of autorite of bileue. Netheles apocrifa 'ben seid in[b] twey maners, as Catholicon seith on this word apocrifa; a book is seid apocrifum[c], either for the[d] autor is[e] vnknowen, and the treuthe therof is opyn[f]; and hooly chirche resseyueth sich a book not to preuyng of feith, but to lernyng of vertues; and siche ben the bookis of Judith and other, whiche Seynt Jerom noumbrith in the prologe on[g] Regum[h]; either a book is seid apocrifum[i], for me doutith of[k] the treuthe therof; and holy chirche resceyueth not siche bookis; and siche ben[l] the book of 'the 3ong[m] childhed of the[n] Sauyour, and the book of the takyng up of the body of Seynt Marye to heuen; Catholicon seith this on that word apocrifa. But sothely alle the bookis of the newe testament, that is, foure gospelleris, Matheu, Mark, Luk, and Jon; xij. pistelis of Poul, vij. smale pistils, the Dedis of Apostlis, and the Apocalips ben fulli of autorite of bileue; therfore cristen men and wymmen, olde and 3onge, shulden[o] studie fast in the newe testament, for it is of ful autorite, and opyn to vndirstonding of simple men, as to the poyntis that be[p] moost nedeful to saluacioun; and the same sentence is in the derkiste placis[q] of holy writ, whiche sentence[r] is in the[r] opyn placis; and ech place of holy writ, bothe opyn and derk, techith mekenes and charite; and therfore he that kepith mekenes and charite hath the trewe vndirstondyng and perfectioun of al holi writ, as Austyn preuith in his sermoun of the preysing of charite. Therfore no simple man of wit be aferd vnmesurabli to studie in the text of holy writ, for whi tho ben wordis of euerlastyng lif, as Petir seide to Crist in the vj. chapitre of Jon; and the Holy Gost stirede hooly men to speke and write[s] the wordis of hooly writ for the coumfort and saluacioun of meke cristen men, as Petir in the ij. pistle in the ende, and Poul in xv.[t] chapitre to Romayns witnessen. And no clerk be proude of the verrey vndirstondyng of holy writ, for whi verrey vndirstonding of hooly writ with outen charite, that kepith[u] Goddis heestis, makith a man depper dampned, as James and Jhesu Crist witnessen; and pride and couetise of clerkis is cause of her blindenes and[v] eresie, and prieth hem fro verrey vndir-

CAP. II.

THE old testament is departid in to thre parties, in to moral comaundementis, iudicials, and cerimonyals. Moral comaundementis techen to holde and preise and cherishe vertues, and to fle and repreue vicis, and these comaundementis bynden euer, and han strengthe, for tho ben groundid in charite and reson,[z] and in lawe[a] of kynde. Moral comaundements. ¶ Judicials techen domes and peynes for orrible synnes, and the iudicials of Moises lawe weren ful iust and profitable for men, for tho weren ordeined[b] of God, that may not erre in his domes, and lawis, and workis. Judicials weren dissoluid in Cristis passioun. Netheles sithen Crist was maad man, and ordeyned lawe of mercy and of charite, and wole not the deth of a[c] sinful man, but repentaunce and saluacioun, cristen men ben not bounden to kepe the[d] iudicials of Moyses lawe, that was[e] endid in the tyme of Cristis passioun. But ȝit cristen lordis that han the swerd, and ben Goddis vikers, in xiij.[f] c°. to Romayns, moun punishe men, that trespassen openly, in catel and bodyly prisoun, and sumtyme bi bodily deth, whanne the synne may not ellis be distried, neither the comynte[g] may ellis[h] be stablishid in pees, as the[i] foure doctours and other latter preuen opynly by holy writ and resoun; but looke that this be don for charite and comyn profit, with mercy and compassioun of bretheren, not for couetise, nether pride, neither for veniaunce of a mannes owne wrong. Hou lordis moun punsch. ¶ Cerymonials techen figuris and sacramentis of the olde lawe, that figureden[k] Crist and his deth, and the misteries of holy chirche in the lawe of grace; and these cerimonials ceessiden outirly, as to obligacioun, in the tyme of Cristis deth, and ben noyful and dampnable to men that kepen tho, and for that the gospel is prechid and knowen generally; for if tho cerymonyes ben kept now, the kepers of tho knowlechen, that Crist is not ȝit comen, neither suffrid deth for mankynde; and this knowleching is opyn heresie[l]; for whi the treuthe and fredom of the gospel suffisith to saluacioun with out keping of cerymonyes maad of God in the old lawe, and mych more with out cerimonyes of sinful men and vnkunnynge, that ben made in the[m] tyme of Antecrist, and of vnbyndyng of Sathanas, in xx.[n] c°. of Apocalips. Therfore as it is opyn eresie to seie, that the gospel with his treuthe and fredom suffisith not to cristen mennes saluacioun with outen kepyng of cerimonyes of Goddis lawe ȝouen to Moyses, so it semith opyn heresie to seie, that the gospel with his treuthe and fredom suffisith not to saluacioun of cristen men with out kepyng of ceremonyes and statutis of sinful men and vnkunnynge, that ben maad in the tyme of Sathanas and of Antecrist. Hou serymonies ceesiden in Cristis deeth, and hou the fredom of the gospel sufficith.

CAP. III.

°SYMPLE men of wit moun be edified mych[p] to heuenly lyuyng bi redyng and knowyng of the olde testament, for in the bigynnyng of Genesis they moun knowe, hou God made heuen and erthe and alle creaturis of nouȝt, and made man to his owne ymage and licnesse, and to haue blisse in body and soule with outen ende[q]. Also 'men moun[r] knowe, hou sore God punishide Adam and Eue for brekyng of his comaundement; and hou Abel plesid God by feith, mekenesse and charite; and hou Caym displeside hym by synnes, and specialli by enuye, hatrede[rr] and manquellyng[s]. Also hou Noe was loued of God, and al the world, outaken viij. persones, was distried[t] for synne; and hou for pride and other synnes God departid many langagis, that no man vndirstood other in the tour of Babel; and hou feithful and obedient to God Abraham was, that he ȝede out of his lond in to a straunge cuntre, and was redy to sle his owne sone Isaac at the wille of God, and gat therfore mich reward of God; and hou God distried Sodom and Gommor, and other thre cytees, for leccherye and Genesis.

other synnes, that tho weren sunkun doun; and the dede see is now where tho[u] grete cytees weren. Also hou trewe and obedient to God weren Isaac and Jacob and Joseph, and hou God kepte[v] hem in alle perels. Al this proces of Genesis shulde stire[w] cristen men to be feithful, and for to drede and loue God, and in alle thingis do[x] his wille[y]. ¶ [z]Also in Exodi men moun[a] knowe, hou God kept his simple peple in Egipt, and encresside hem gretly in that lond, vndir the persecucioun and tirauntrie of Farao[b], and deliueride hem by many miraclis, and punishid Farao and his peple with ten[c] stronge veniauncis, and fedde[d] hem meruelously in desert xl. ȝeris, where no duelling of men was bifore, and made hem to[e] ouercome the strong peple of Amalech. Aftir this God tauȝte hem wyis gouernayle, and bitook to[f] hem the[g] ten comaundementis and other iudicials, to punishe gretly opyn grete synnes. Also[h] they[i] weren ful bisy to make a costlew tabernacle to the onour of God, by his bidding and techyng, that figuride holi chirche and vertues in mennes soulis. At the laste God took gret veniaunce on[k] hem for idolatrie, whanne thei forsoken the feith and worshipyng[l] of God, and onoureden ȝoten calues bi stiryng[m] of the deuel. And thanne Moyses was a trewe mediatour bitwix God and the[n] sinful peple, and seide thus to God, for gret trist of his mercy and riȝtfulnes[o], and for[p] gret charite to the peple, "either[pp] forȝiue thou this trespas to hem, either do me out of thi book in which thou hast writen me;" and for this deuout preier and greet charite of Moyses God sparede the synful pepil, and distryede not sodeynly al the pepil, but took hem to mercy and grace. And this proces of Exodi shulde make men trysty[q] in Goddis help, and to be trewe in his loue, and eschewe his offence with al her myȝtis. ¶ [r]The iij. book clepid[s] Leuitici techith men sacrificis due to God, and for synnes of the peple, in the[t] tyme of the olde testament, and that[t] no man vnworthi shulde neyȝe to the seruise and sacrifice of God. These sacrificis owen not to be kept now, for tho figureden the passioun and deth[u] of Crist, and remissioun of synnes bi the blood and merit of Crist, in the lawe of grace. Also this book techith men to absteyne fro wedlok of nyȝ kyn and affynyte, with ynne the ij. degre[v], and ordeyneth peyne of deeth for ydolatrie, and weddyng with ynne the ij. degre of consanguynyte and affynite. At the last this book techith men[w] to kepe Goddis heestis, and for to loue her neiȝboris and to[x] do equyte to hem, and werkis of mercy to nedy men; and comaundith iust weyȝtis and mesures, and domes; and forbedith strongly ydolatrye and wicche craftis[y] and false coniouryngis; and tellith prosperite that shal come to hem that kepen Goddis heestis, and veniaunce and peyne to hem that breken Goddis heestis. And this proces of Leuitici shulde make cristen men aferd to breke Goddis heestis, and ioyful to kepe tho to lyf and deth, for[z] reward of God in euerlastyng blisse. ¶ [a]The iiij. book clepid Numeri tellith the noumbre of peple led out of Egipt, bothe of lewid men and of prestis and of dekenys; and how God kept hem longe in the orrible desert, and punisshide hem alle bi deeth, out taken Caleph and Josue, for grucchyng and mystriste to Goddis word, and punisshide Marie, Moyses sistyr, with lepre, for bacbytyng of Moyses, the mylde seruaunt of God. Also[b] whanne God wolde haue distryed the peple for grucchyng aȝens hym, Moyses preyede with al his herte for the peple that wolde stoone[c] hym to deeth. Also God techith there, that he that doth ony synne by pride shal be deed, and that he that brak the sabot, ȝhe by gaderyng of stickis, shulde be stooned of[d] alle the peple. Also God punisshide soore Chore, Dathan, and Abyron, that weren rebel aȝens Moyses and Aaron, and made discencioun in the peple, so that the erthe openyde, and deuouride hem with here tabernaclis, and al her catel[e], and thei ȝeden doun quyke in to helle. ȝit whanne the peple grucchide aȝeyns Moyses and Aaron, and wolde sle hem vniustly, and God killide mony thousendis of the[f] peple herfore, Moyses bad Aaron preye, and offre encense for the peple; and so he ceesside the veniaunce. Also God techith there, that prestis shulen haue the firste fruytis and the[ff] first[g] boren thingis, and part of sacrificis and avowis and offringis; and dekenys shulen haue tithis of the peple, and ȝiue her tithis, that is, the tenthe part of tithis whiche thei token of the peple, to the hiȝest prest, and prestis and dekenys shulen holde hem apayed with her spiritual part of tithis and offryngis, and take no possessioun 'in the lond[h] of her britheren, for God hymself shal be the part and eritage[i] of prestis, in the myddys of the sones of Israel. Also for Moyses and Aaron bileueden not fully to Goddis word, but doutiden of his byheest at the water of aȝenseying, God suffride not hem for[k] to entre in to the lond of byheest, but bothe weren deed in desert. Also in this book ben told the duellyngis of the children of Israel in desert, and the batels whiche thei hadden aȝeyns hethen men; and of Balaam hou he was huyrid to curse[l] Goddis peple, and hou God compellyd hym to blesse his peple, and to[m] seye profesie of Crist. And for the peple of Israel dide fornicacioun and idolatrie, God bad Moyses hange alle the princis aȝens the sunne, that the strong veniaunce of God were turned awey fro the peple of Israel. And for as myche as Fynees the prest killide a duke of Israel, that dide fornicacioun with an hethen womman, and dide[u] this for feruent loue to God, he gat of God euerlastyng presthod for hym and his[o] seed, and turned awey Goddis wraththe fro the children of Israel. Also there is tauȝt, who shal be eyr of a man; and of halydayes, and sacrificis, and offryngis maade in tho; and whiche avowis shulen be holden, and whiche not; and of batels; and hou the preyes shulden be departid among the peple, and what shulde falle to the prest; and hou the lond of byheest shulde be departid to xij. lynagis; and dekenys shulden haue citees to enhabite in tho, and the subarbees to here sheep and beestys; and citees of refuyt shulden be ordeyned for hem that shedden blood vnwilfully, not of purpos, neithir hatrede byfore goynge; and he that is gilty of mannis deeth shal be slayn with outen ony[p] redempcioun. This proces of Numeri shulde stire cristen men for to loue here enemyes, and do good to[q] hem, as Moyses and Aaron diden, and to kepe Goddis heestis, and shede[r] not mannis blood vniustly. ¶ [s]The fyfthe book clepid Deutronomye is a rehersyng and confermyng of al the lawe biforegoyng[t], and styrith[u] men gretly to kepe and teche Goddis heestis, and adde no thing to tho, neither drawe awey ony thing fro tho; and first it techith, that wise men and myȝty shulen[uu] be maad iugis, and deme iustly[v] the pore and the riche; aftirward hou the Jewis ouercamen Seon, the[w] kyng of Hesebon, and token his lond and alle the goodis therynne in to her owne possessioun, and dedyn in lyk maner to Og the[x] kyng of Basan, and to his lond and goodis. Ferthermore God comaundith men to kepe hise heestis, and adde no thing therto, neither[y] drawe ony[z] thing ther fro, and that they drede and loue God of[a] al her herte, and al[b] her soule, and al her strengthe, and eschewe ydolatrie, and serue and worshipe hym aloone; and that thei teche Goddis heestis to here sones, and thenke on tho heestis in hous and weye, slepynge and wakynge. Also[c] God comaundith his peple to eschewe weddyngis of hethen men and wymmen to her children, lest they ben drawen to idolatrye, and bihetith many blessyngis to hem and miche encresyng of goodis, if thei kepen treuly hise comaundementis, and that strong veniaunce and distryyng shal come on the Jewis, if thei doen[d] ydolatrie, and ben[e] vnobedient to God. Also God biddith[f] hem haue[g] mynde, that they weldiden the lond of byheest, not for her owne riȝtfulnesse and strengthe, but for the synnes of men that duelliden therynne, and for the ooth of God which[h] he made to Abraham and to other hooly men. Also in the vij. ȝeer shal be remissioun of dette to citeseynes and kynnesmen, netheles not to a pylgrym and comelyng, for he may be compellid to paye. Outirly a nedy man and begger shal not be among[w] Goddis peple; but pore men shulen not fayle in the lond, therfore ryche men shulen helpe hem with loue, and helpe hem wilfully in here nede. Thanne God techith of thre grete solempnetees, of pask, of the feeste of woukis either pentecost, and of the feeste of tabernaclis[x]; and that maystris and iugis shulen be ordeyned in alle ȝatis[y] either citees by ech lynage, to deme the peple by iust doom, and take not ȝiftis nether persones. Ferthermore God techith, that who euer is conuyct by tweyne eithir thre witnessis[z], that he hath do idolatrie, he shal be stoonyd, first by the[a] witnessis[z], and thanne by al the pepil. He that is proud and wole not obeye to the comaundement of the hiȝe prest, and to the doom of the iugis[b], in that that[c] thei techen Goddis lawe, shal be deed. Thanne God techith, what maner kyng the pepil shal make, and what shal be his office. Aftirward God techith, that prestis and dekenys, and alle that ben of the same lynage, shulen 'not haue[cc] part and eritage with the residue pepil of Israel, for they shulen ete the sacrifices of the Lord, and the offringis of hym, and thei shulen take noon othir thing of the possessioun of her bretheren; for whi God hym self is her eritage. Ferthermore God forbedith idolatrie, and to enquere coniourers, and to kepe dremys and chiterynge of briddis; and comaundith that no wicche neithir[d] enchaunter be, and that men take not[e] councel at hem that han spiritis in cloos, neithir at false dyuynours, neithir axe of deede men the trouthe. CAP. IV.

Josue.

[b]The vj. book, which is clepid Josue, tellith in general, that Josue brouȝte the peple into the lond of biheeste, and departide it bi lott to hem; and first how God bihiȝte to Josue that noon schulde mowe[c] aȝenstonde him and his peple in alle the daies of his lijf; and God bihiȝte that Josue schulde departe bi lot to his peple the lond of biheest; and God comaundide him to kepe al the lawe, and bowe not fro it, but thenke therinne bi[d] daies and nyȝtis, that he kepe and do tho thingis that ben writen therinne. Aftir this Josue sente aspies to bihoolde the lond and the citee of Jerico; and thei entriden in to the hous of a comun womman Raab, and weren sauid there bi counceil and helpe of the womman. Thanne Josue bad the prestis take the arke of boond[e] of pees of the Lord, and goo bifore the peple, and thei diden so. And whanne the[f] prestis camen with[g] the arke to the brinke of Jurdan, the greet watir of Jurdan wente awey to the deed se, and the hiȝere wateris stooden stille as a wal, so that the peple passide bi the drie botme, and the prestis stoodin on the drie erthe in the myddis of Jurdan. Also Josue bad xij. men of xij.[h] lynagis of Israel take xij. greete stoonis fro the botme of Jordan, and sette tho in Galgalis, where the peple settide[i] tentis in the nyȝt[j] aftir the passage[k] of Jurdan, and take xij. stoonis of the lond, and putte in the myddis of Jordan, where the arke hadde stoonde; and bad that fadris schulden[l] teche hire children, hou thei passiden bi the drie botme of Jurdan, for God driede the[m] watris theroffe, as he hadde do before in the reed se, and the prestis and princis and al the peple obeyede to Josue. Thanne[n] Josue circumcide[o] the peple that was vncircumcidid xl. ȝeer in desert, and the peple made paask in the xiiij. day of the monthe at euentid; and Josue siȝ an aungel of the Lord, which aungel was prince of Goddis oost. Also the stronge wallis of Jerico felden doun at Goddis ordynaunce, whanne the[p] prestis brayeden with vij. trumpis, and alle the peple criede an hiȝ in the vij. day of cumpassing of the citee. And the peple of Israel distroiede and brente the citee and alle thingis therinne, outaken Raab and tho that weren in her hous, and outtaken gold and syluer, and vessels of bras and yroun[q], whiche thei haleweden in to the tresorie of the Lord. Also for Achar dide aȝens Goddis bidding, and took to himself a thing reserued to Goddis vs, he was stoonid and brent, and alle hise goodis weren brent with hym; and til[r] this punysching was doon on hym, 'the peple[s] of Israel myȝte not stoonde, but was ouercomen of hire enemyes. After this punysching of Achar Josue took the citee of Hay, and killede the king and al the peple, and distroiede and brente the citee, and hangide the king therof in[ss] a iebat. Thanne Josue bildide an auter to God in the hill of Hebal, and offride theronne brent sacrifice[t] and pecsible sacrificis[u], and wroot the Deutronomye of Moyses lawe on stoonis. And first he blesside the peple of Israel, and aftir these thingis he redde alle[v] the wordis of blessing and of cursing, and alle thingis that weren writen in the book of lawe[w]; he lefte noo thing vntouchid of these thingis whiche Moises hadde comaundid, but he declaride alle thingis bifore al the multitude of Israel, to wymmen and litel[x] children, and to comelyngis that dwelliden[y] among hem. Also men of Gabaon feyneden hem to be of fer cuntre, and bi this fraude thei 'gaten of Josue and other princis pees and lijf[z]; and for this fraude thei and alle hire successouris weren maad boonde, to bringe woode and watir to the seruise of the auter and of[a] al the multitude of Israel for euere[b]. Also Josue by Goddis help ouercam v. greete kingis in oo day, and made hise princis trede[bb] on the neckis of these kingis, and aftirward[c] hangide these kingis in v. iebatis, and he ouercam alle the[d] kingis and her peplis that dwelliden in the[e] lond of biheest, that weren xxxj. kingis, and departide the lond of biheest to xij. lynagis of Israel bi lot, and citees of refuyt, and citees to prestis and dekenes to dwelle inne[f], as God comaundide. This processe of Josue schulde stire cristene men to haue greet trist in God, and dreede noo man neither[g] peple, as longe as thei seruen[h] treuly Almy3ty God. ¶ [i]The vij. book clepid[k] Judicum tellith[l] that the puple of Israel was reulid with iugis, either domysmen, aftir the deeth of Josue, and sumtyme bi a womman Delbora. Whanne the peple felde to greete synnes, and specialy to ydolatrie, God sente aduersaries on hem that turmentiden the Jewis ful sore, and killide many thousendis of hem, and heeld othere vndir tribute and greet thraldam. And whanne the peple repentide vereily, and criede to God with al her herte, he sente help to hem, and reiside a iuge that ouercam her enemyes, and reulide hem wel in pees and in Goddis lawe. This prosces of Judicum schulde stire cristene men for to flee synne, and loue God that doith so greet mercy to hem that repentyn[m] verili. ¶ [n]'This book comprehendith the storie of[o] Ruth, that was an hethene womman, and lefte her nacoun, and ydolatrie, and bileeuede in God, and kepte his lawe. Therfore sche was weddid to a noble man of the Jewis, and is set in the genelogie either[p] kynrede of oure Sauyour. This story schulde stire alle men[q] to forsake her synne, and serue God treuly in al hire lijf, for reward of heuenly blisse. ¶ [r]The first book of Kingis tellith, how the prest Ely and his sones weren repreued and slayn, for thei gouerneden yuele Goddis peple, and for her synne and necligence the peple dide myche synne, and was ouercomen of hethene men, and the arke of God was taken of hethene men, and thei killeden manye thousindis[s] of the[t] Jewis; and how the trewe chijld Samuel was a feithful prophete of the Lord, and gouernede wel the peple in Goddis seruise and ri3tfulnesse, and dide noon extorcioun, neither[u] took 3iftis of eny man, neither coueitide eny mannis good, but dide alle thingis in his offis iustly bifore God and man. And whanne Samuel was eeld, he settide[v] his sones iuges of[vv] Israel; and for thei bowide aftir auarice, and tooken 3iftis, and peruertiden doom, the peple axiden a king on[w] hem, to greet indignacoun of God and harm of[x] hemself. Thanne Saul that[y] was pore and meke, and sou3te the assis of his fadir, was maad king, and dide wel a lytel while, and aftirward for his pride and coueitise he was repreued of God, and pryued fro the reume, bothe he and his kyn; and pore Dauith was chosen king bi Goddis ordynaunce for his meeknesse, mersy, and charite. Dauith sparyde Saul his enemye, that pursuede him to deeth vniustly, and was a traitour and blasfemere[z] of[a] God, and not oonly sparide him twyes bitaken in to his hoondis, whanne he my3te haue slayn him, and 3it ascapide[b] harmles, but also lettide hise men to smyte hym, whanne thei my3ten haue slayn him, and scapid[bb] harmles. And 3it the wickid tyraunt Saul pursuede him for enuye, and sou3te his deth in manye maners, and euere God kepte Dauith in alle perrels, and 3eldide peyne[c] to Saul for his tyrauntrie and wickidnesse, and made him to be slayn of hethene men. This processe of the firste book of Kingis schulde stire prestis to be not necligent in her offis, neither to be coueytous, and styre seculer lordis to be meke and iust to God and men. ¶ [d]The ij. book of Kingis tellith first, hou Dauith biweylide greetly the deth of Saul and of[dd] Jonatas, and of Goddis peple; and Dauith killede the man of Amalech that killede[e] Saul outirly, aftir the deeth wounde of Saul, and brou3te to Dauith the coroune 'and bye[f] of Saul. Aftir this[g] the lynage of Juda corounnede either anoyntide Dauith in Ebron, that he schulde reyne on the hous of Juda; and thanne was longe werre bytwixxe[h] Hisboseth, sone[i] of Saul, and bitwixe[k] the hous of Dauith; Dauith encreside euere, and waxe strongere 'and strongere[l], and the hous of Saul dicreeside ech day; and Dauith rengnide vij. 3eer in Ebron, and gat vj. sones. Also Dauith made mychel[m] sorewe for the[n] deth of Abner, whanne Joab hadde killid him bi treesoun. Also Dauith killide Baana and Rechab, that killeden bi treesoun Hisboseth his enemye. Thanne al Israel cam in to Ebron, and anoyntide Dauith in to king of[o] Israel, and Dauith regnede on Juda in Ebron vij. 3eer and an half, and regnede[p] in Jerusalem xxxiij. 3eer on al Israel and Juda, and was[q] xxx. 3er eeld whanne he began to rengne, and rengnede xl. 3eer. Aftir this the noble king Dauith hadde twyes[r] victorie[s] of Filisteis. Thanne Dauith took xxx. thousind chosen[t] men of Israel to bringe to his place the arke of God, for reuerence and deuocioun. Dauith made greet mynstrelsye, and mekide himself bifore the arke, and suffride rebukinge of Mycol, the dou3tir of Saul; therfore Dauith thou3te to[u] bylde an hous to the ark of God. Thanne God telde to Dauith that his sone schulde bylde this hous, and the trone of the reume of Dauith schal be stable[v] withouten ende; and this is fillid in Crist. Thanne Dauith hadde victorie of[w] many londis, and made tho tributarie to Israel, and God kepte Dauith in alle thingis, to whiche he 3ed forth. And Dauith dide dom and ri3tfulnesse to al his peple, and he dide mercy and curtesie to Myfyboseth, sone[x] of Jonatas. Aftir these thingis Dauith dwellide at home, whanne Joab and the oost wente to bateile, and[y] 'in this tyme Dauith[z] dide auoutrie with Bersabee, the wijf of Vrie, and procuride the deth of Vrie bi tresoun. Thanne God sente Nathan the prophete to repreue Dauith of this synne, and he took meekly his[a] repreuyng, and knoulechide that he synnede a3ens God; and God for3af the synne, but swerd and persecusioun 3ede[b] neuere awey fro his hous, for God killede the sone of Bersabee, and oo sone of Dauith killede another, and Absolon his sone roos a3ens him, and droof him out of Jerusalem, and sou3te with stronge oost to slee him. Thanne Dauith 3ede out of Jerusalem on his feet, and sti3ide with bare feet into the hi3nesse of the hille of Olyuete, and wepte, and al his peple wepte bittirly. And Dauith mekede him to God, and seide, " 3if God seith[c] to me, thou pleesist not me, I am redy, do he that that[d] is good " bifore himself." Thanne Semey, that was of the kyn of Saul, dispiside Dauith, and clepide him a manquellere, and a man of Belial, and a rauenour of the rewme, and he curside Dauith, and castide stoonis and erthe a3ens Dauith, and a3ens alle the seruauntis of king Dauith; and whanne Abisay wolde slee this cursere, Dauith bad him suffre Semey to curse him, and seide, God comaundide[e] hym 'that he curse[f] Dauith. And[g] the kyng seide to Abysay and to alle his seruauntis, " Loo! my sone that 3ede out of my wombe seekith " my lijf, that is, to slee me, how myche more now this sone of Gemyny; suffre 3e him to " curse bi comaundement of the Lord; if in caas the Lord bihoolde my turment, and 3elde " good to me for this[h] cursing to day." Aftirward Absolon defoulide opynly his fadris wijfes bifore al Ysrael. Thanne Achitofel 3af a fel counceyl, to pursue Dauith in that[i] ny3t with xij. thousandis[k] of men, and sle him bifore that he were war; but this counceil was Thanne Absolon gaderide al the power of Israel to make opyn werre a3ens his fadir; natheles Dauith for pite and charite comaundide[l] thre princis of his oost to kepe Absolon alyue, that he my3te repente, and be sauid. And whanne Dauith knew that Absolon was slayn, he made so[m] gret sorewe, that almest he was deed, and al the[n] peple was[o] in poynt to forsake Dauith. Thanne for this perel Dauith lefte his moornyng, and sat opinly in the 3ate, to conforte al his oost. After this the counceil of al[p] Israel cam to Dauith, that thei wolde[q] brynge him in to his rewme worschipfully; and Dauith for3af the opyn tresoun to hem that thei hadden do bifore[qq], and stiride swetly[r] men of Juda, that weren specialy his traytouris, to come and bringe hym in to his rewme, and for3af her tresoun, and he for3af the souereyn tresoun to Amasa, that was of his owne kyn, and was prince of the oost of Absalon to slee Dauith; and Dauith swor to make this Amasa prince next Joab, and for3af the synne and cursing and tresoun[s] to Semey, and swor that he shulde not dy3e. 3it bifore that Dauith cam to Jerusalem, a[t] new debate roos bitwixe the[u] men of Israel and the men of Juda, for this bringing a3en of the king was not teld first to men[v] of Israel; and bi stiring of Syba, a man of Belial, that was of kyn[w] of Saul, al Israel was departid fro Dauith, and suede this Syba; and in this tyme Joab killyde bi tresoun the noble kny3t Amasa. Thanne this Syba passide bi alle the lynagis[x] of Israel til into Habela, and into[y] Bethmaka, and alle chosen men weren gaderid to him. And Joab and his oost bysegeden these citees, and wolde distroie the greet citee Habela, and a wijs woman of the citee sauid it bi hire counceil, and made Syba to be slayn, and al the peple to be sauid on[z] bothe sydis. Also vij. men of the kyn of Saul weren slayn of Gabaonytis, bi suffring of Dauith, and bi counceil of God, for Saul killede wickidly the men of Gabaon; and for this synne of Saul hungir was maad thre 3eer in the daies of Dauith; and aftir this veniaunce don on the hous of Saul, God dide mersy to the lond. Thanne is set a greet song of Dauith, which[a] he spac to God, whanne he hadde delyuered him fro the hond of alle his enemyes; thanne sueth the noumbre of stronge men of Dauith. At the laste Dauith for pride and a3ens the lawe noumbride the peple of Israel, and[b] therfore lxx. thousind of[c] men weren deed bi pestilence. Thanne Dauith repentide him[d] sore, and mekide him to God, and seide thus, "I it am, that "synnede, and I[e] dide wickidly; what[f] han these men don that ben scheep, that is, symple "and innocent in[g] comparisoun of me; I biseche that[h] thin hond be turnid a3ens me, and "a3ens the hous of my fadir." Thanne God sente his profete Gad to hym, and bad him make an auter, and offre brent sacrifices and peesible sacrifices; and God dide mercy to the lond, and the veniaunce ceeside of Israel. The[i] prosces of this ij. book ou3te to stire kingis and lordis to mersy[k] and ri3tfulnesse, and euere to be war of ydilnesse, that brou3te Dauith to auoutrie and othere myscheues, and euere to be meeke to God and hise prestis, and sore[l] repente[m] of[n] hire mysdeedis, and make amendis to God and men, and wilfully for3eue wroongis don to hem, and euere be war of pride and extorcouns, leest God take veniaunce on al the peple, as he dide on Dauith and his peple, and euere to be pacient and mersiful, as Dauith was, to gete remissioun of synnes bifore don, and[o] to gete pees, and prosperite, and heuenly blisse withouten ende.

Hou Absolon roos a3ens his fadir Dauith.

Hou Dauith made sorewe for Absolon his sone.

the corneer of the auter, tyl Salamon seide, that if he were a good man, he schulde not dye; ellis, if yuel were founden in him, he schulde di3e. Thanne Dauith, in the tyme of his dy3inge, chargide Salamon to kepe wel Goddis lawe, and to quyte to the sones of Bersellay the trewthe and kyndnesse of her fadir, and to punysche Joab for his trecherouse manquelling of Abner and of Amasa in the tyme of pees, and to[r] punysche wisely Semey for his wrste cursing, which he dide to Dauith. Aftir these thingis Salamon made Adonyas to be slayn, for he purposide gilefully[s] to be king. And Salamon castide awey Abiathar, that he was not the prest of the Lord, and exylide him also, for he assentide to Adonyas, and was traytour to the king. Also[t] Salamon comaundide Joab to be slayn in the tabernacle at the auter, for he hadde slayn gilefully twey princis in pees, withoute wyting of Dauith; and the king ordeynede Sadoch prest for Abiathar. Thanne the king comaundide Semey, that he schulde not go out of Jerusalem, and if he passide the stronde of Cedron, he schulde be deed; and Semey acceptide this; and for he passide these boundis, the king comaundide him to be slayn, and so he was slayn by comaundement of the king. Aftir these thingis the rewme was confermed in to the hondis of Salamon, and he weddide the dou3ter of Faroo, king of Egipt. Thanne God bad Salamon axe of him, what hym lykide, and he[u] axide that God schulde 3eue to him wijs[v] herte, that he my3te deme his peple, and make discrescyoun eithir departyng bitwixe good and yuel. And this axing pleeside God ful myche, therfore God 3af to him a wijs herte and vndirstondinge, in so myche that noon bifore hym was lyk hym[w], neithir schal rise aftir hym. Also God 3af to him richesse and glorie, that noon among kingis was lyk him[w] in alle daies bifore. Thanne for Salamon 3af a wijs sentense of dom bitwixe[x] twey comen wymmen, that passide the wit of comun men, thei dredden the king, and seyin that[y] Goddis wisdom was in him to make dom. Thanne is toold the worschipeful meyne and houshoold of Salamon. Aftir these thingis Salamon bildide a noble hous to himself, and a famouse temple to God in Jerusalem. And aftir that[z] the temple was fully maad, alle the eldre men and princis of lynagis and dukis[a] of[b] meynes of the children of Israel weren gaderid to king Salamon in Jerusalem, to bringe the arke of God fro Syon in to his owne place in[c] the temple. Thanne the king axide of God[d] manye preieris, and profitis[e] for hem that preieden deuoutly in the temple, and God grauntide tho. Aftir these thingis God halewide the temple, and certyfiede to Salamon, that if he kepte alle his comaundementis, he shulde sette the trone of Salamons rewme on[f] Israel[g] withouten ende; and if the pepel of Israel and her children kepen not Goddis heestis, but worschipen alyen goddis, he schal do awey Israel fro the face of lond[h] which he 3af to hem, and God schal caste awey fro his si3t the temple which[i] he halewide to his name, and Israel schal be into a prouerbe and[k] fable either tale to alle peplis, and this hous schal be into ensaumple. Aftir this the qwene of Saba cam to Salamon, and hadde greet aray of men and of[l] jewelis, and 3af manye jewelis to Salamon, and he a3een to hire. Also Salamon tau3te hire alle thingis that sche hadde in hire herte, and sche blessid God and Salamon and his seruauntis, and 3ede into hire lond. Thanne Salamon made manye scheeldis and bokelers of gold, and made a greet trone of yuer, and clothide it with fyn gold. Thanne king Salamon was magnified ouer alle kyngis of erthe in richessis[m] and wisedom, and al erthe desyride to see his face, and to heere his wisdom, which his God hadde 3oue in his herte. Aftir alle these thingis Salamon, whanne he was eeld, louede gretly manye hethene wymmen, and hadde a thousind wijues, principal[n] and secundaries, and thanne his herte was bischrewid and peruertid bi tho wymmen, that he suede alyen goddis, and worschipide hem. Therfore God reiside an aduersarie to Salamon in his lijf, and departide his rewme in the tyme of Roboam his sone, and ȝaf ten lynagis to Joroboam his seruaunt, and kepte oo lynage to his sone for the merit of Dauith his fadir. And this departyng bifelde myche, for Roboam forsook the counceil of eelde and wijse men, and suede the counceil of ȝunge men[o], and spac harde wordis to the peple. Thanne Roboam gaderide proudly al the hous of Juda, and the lynage of Beniamyn, an c. thousind and iiij. score thousind of chosen men and werrouris, that thei schulden fiȝte aȝens the hous of Israel, and bringe aȝen the rewme to Roboam, the[p] sone of Salamon; but God forbed this werre to Roboam and al his peple, for whi this word of departyng of the rewme was don of God. Thanne Jeroboam made ij. golden caluys, and bad Israel worschipe tho, and stiȝe no more to Jerusalem, and seide, "Israel, lo! these ben thi goddis, that ledden thee out of the lond of Egipt;" and he made vnworthi prestis of the laste men of the peple, that were not of the sones of Leuy, and he made templis in hiȝe placis. Also whanne Jeroboam stood on the auter and castide encense, a man of God cam fro Juda bi the word of God, and seide, "A sone, Josias bi "name, schal be born to the hous of Dauith, and he schal sle on this auter the prestis of "hiȝe placis, that brenne now encense in this autir, and he schal brenne boonys of men on "this auter;" and the prophete ȝaf this singne[q], that the auter schal be cleft, and the asche[r] therinne schal be sched out. Thanne Jeroboam heeld forth his hond, and bad take that prophete, and his hond was drie, and hee myȝte not drawe it aȝen, and bi preier of the prophete the hond was heelid. And[s] singne[t] bifelde on the auter, as the prophete seide; and for that prophete eet breed in that place aȝens Goddis bidding, ȝhe bi disseit of a fals prophete, the trewe prophete of God was slayn of a lyoun in[u] the wey homward. Aftir these wordis Jeroboam turnede not aȝen fro his worste weie, but aȝenward of the laste peples he made prestis of hiȝe placis, who euere wolde, fyllede[v] his hond[w], and[x] was maad prest of hiȝe placis; and for this cause the hous of Jeroboam synnede, and was distroied, and doon awey fro the face of erthe[y]. Aftir this the prophete Ahia, that was blynd for eelde[z], knew the wijf of Joroboam, that feynede hire to be anothir womman, and he bifore seide to hire, that hire syk sone schulde diȝe in hir[a] entryng in to hir hous, and that the hous of Jeroboam schulde be distroied outtirly for his synnes; and Israel schal be dryuen out of his good lond for the synnes of Joroboam, that synnede, and made Israel to do synne. Also the peple of Juda dide ydolatrie; therfore the king of Egipt took awey the tresouris of Goddis hous, and of the kingis hous, and the golden scheeldis of Salamon, for whiche Roboam made scheeldis of bras. And batail was bitwixe[aa] Roboam and Jeroboam in alle daies. Thanne Abia regnede thre ȝeer on[b] Juda, and ȝede in alle the synnes of his fadir. Aftir[c] him[d] roos king Asa in Juda, and he dide riȝtfulnesse bifore God, and dide awey idolatrie and sodomytis fro the lond, and his herte was perfit with God in alle daies. And schortly amonge alle the kingis of Israel was noon feithful to God; summe weren goode amonge the kingis of Juda; and this figurith, that among men of hooly chirche be summe goode, but among eretikis is noon good outtirly, as Jerom seith. Aftir manye yuele kingis of Israel roos Acab, the worste of alle bifore hym[e], and he weddide Jesabel, an hethene womman, the douȝtir of Mechaal, king of Sydonyes, and Achab dide manyfoold idolatrie. Thanne roos Elie the prophete, and seide to Acab, that in thre ȝeer and an half neither reyn neither dew schal be. Aftir this the prophete Elye hidde himself in the stronde of Carith, aȝens Jordan, and drank watir, and was fed of rauenys there, whiche brouȝten to him breed and flesch in the euentid and morewtid, and aftir that the stronde was dried up, God bad Elye go into Sarepta of Sydoneyes, and there he was fed of a widewe, and the pot of mele and 'the pot[f] of oile failede not to the widewe, til God ȝaf reyn on the[g] erthe. Thanne Elie reiside to lijf the deed chijld of a womman, at whom he was myche susteyned. And aftir manye daies God bad Elye[h] schewe him[i] to Acab, that God schulde ȝeue reyn on the lond; and Elie dide so; and greet hungir was in Samarie. Thanne Elie apperide first to Abdie, that dredde God, and fedde an c. prophetis of God, whanne Jesabel killide the prophetis of God; and Elie swor to Abdie bi the Lord of oostis, that he wolde appere in that day to Achab. Thanne Acab axide Elye, "Wher thou art he, "that distrowblist[k] Israel?" And Elie seide, "Not I distrowblide[l] Israel, but thou and the hous "of thi fadir, that han forsaken Goddis heestis, and han sued Baalym, han[m] distroublid[n] Elye. "Israel." Aftir this the prophete Elie conuyctid bi an opyn myracle viij. c. and l. prophetis of Baal of opin ydolatrie, and killede hem alle with helpe of the peple, that bileeuede to God for the greet myracle. And[o] aftir this God sente greet rayn, and Elye ran bifore Acab to[p] the citee Jesrael[q]. Aftir these thingis Elye fledde for dreede of Jesabel, that manaside to slee hym, and whanne he hadde fled into disert bi the jurney of oo[r] day, he axide of God to diȝe; and whanne he slepte, an aungel bad hym rise, and eete breed baken vndir aischis, and drinke watir; and he ȝede in the strengthe of that mete xl. daies and xl. nyȝtis, til to Oreb the hil of God; and whanne he was hid there in a denne, and seide, that he was left aloone a prophete of the Lord, and thei souȝten to slei him, God[s] bad him go to Damask, and anoynte Asahel king on[t] Sirie, and anoynte Hieu king on[t] Israel, and anoynte Elisee a[u] prophete for him, and these thre schulden do veniaunce on trespasouris, and slee hem; and God lefte to[v] himself vij. thousind of men in Israel, whois knees were not bowid bifore[w] Baal. Thanne it sueth how Elisee suede Elie. Aftir these thingis king Acab hadde twey greete and merueilous victories aȝens Benadab, king of Sirie, for he blasfemede God of Israel. And for king Acab dide false mersy and killide not this blasfemere[x] Benadab, whom God bitook into hise hondis, God sente a prophete to Acab, and telde thus, "For thou suffredist a man wrthi the deth to go fro thin hond, thi lijf schal be for his lijf, Of Jesabel and Naboth. "and thi peple schal be for his peple." Aftirward Jesabel the qwene made Nabath to be stonyd to deth[y] bi false witnesse, and assent of Acab, for he noolde chaunge neither[z] sille his vyner[a] to the king; and whanne Acab ȝede[b] doun to take possessioun of this vyner, God bad Elye meete him, and seie thus, "Thou hast slayn and hast take possessioun; the "Lord seith these thingis, in this place wherinne doggis lickiden[c] the blood of Nabath, thei "schulen licke also thi blood." And Acab seide to Elye, "Wher thou hast founden me "thin enemy?" And Elye seide, "I haue founde, for thou art seeld to do yuel in Goddis "siȝt, therfore God schal distroie and slee ech man of the house of Acab, and ȝeue his hous "as the hous of Jeroboam, and as the hous of Baasa, for Acab terride God to wraththe, "and made Ysrael to do synne. Also doggis scholen ete Jesabel in the feeld of Jesrael; if "Acab diȝeth[d] in the citee, doggis scholen ete him, if he dieth[d] in the feeld, briddis of the "eir schulen ete him." Noon othir was such as Acab[e], that was seeld to do yuel bifore God; forwhi Jesabel his wijf excitide him, and he dide abomynable ydolatrie. Thanne Acab dide ful greet penaunce, and was mekid bifore[f] God; therfore God brouȝte not yn this yuel in his daies, but in the daies of his sone. In the thridde ȝeer aftir these thingis, aboute iiij. c. prophetis of Baal counceiled Acab to make werre aȝens the king of Syrie for Hou Mychee counseilide Acab. a citee clepid Ramoth of Galaad, and bihiȝten victorie and prosperite to Acab. But Mychee, oo prophete of God, telde to Acab in Goddis name, that the spirit of leesingis disceyuede him bi his false prophetis, and that Acab schulde be slayn in that bateil; and so it bifelde in deede, but Mychee was dispisid and beten of the false prophetis, and was prisonyd, purposid[g] to be slayn of the king, whanne he cam aȝeen in pees; and king Josophat, a good man, was in this bateile with cursid Acab, but Acab was slayn, and doggis lickeden his Ocosias. blood, and Josophat was sauid bi Goddis help. Thanne roos[h] Ocosias, king of Israel, for Acab his fadir, and Ocosias worschipide Baal, and terride God to ire bi alle thingis which

CAP. VI.

The iiij. book of Kingis. Hou the rewmes of Israel and Juda weren distroied. Ocosias.

[l]The iiij. book of Kingis tellith in general, how the rewme of Israel and the rewme of Juda weren conquerid of hethene men, for manye synnes which thei diden aȝens God and men, and weren obstynat, and dide not fruytfull[m] penance in due tyme. First it tellith in special, hou the wickid king Ocosyas sente to take counceil at Belsabub, wher he myȝte lyue, and rekyuere of his syknesse; therfore God sente Elye, the prophete, to telle to him that he schulde die, and go not doun of his bed. Thanne this king sent to Elye a prince on[n] l. men, and l. men with hym, to clepe Elye to the king; and fijer cam doun fro heuene, and deuouride this prince, and l. men that weren with him, for in scorn thei clepiden Elye[o] the man of God; and in lyk manere fijer deuouride another prince, and l. men with him; the thridde prince and hise l.[p] that mekeden hem to God and to the prophete, weren sauid on lyue. And God bad Elie go doun with hem to the king, and repreue him of his synne, and telle to the king himself, that he schal die and go not doun of his bed. Aftir this the prophete Elie schulde be rauyschid awey fro erthe, and Elisee knew this, and suede him in ech place til to rauysching[q]; and Elie smoot with his mantel the watris of Jordon, and tho weren departid therbi, and Elie and Elysee ȝeden ouere bi the drie botme therof. Thanne Elie was rauyschid in a char of fijer fro Elisee, and stiȝede bi a whirlwynd in to heuene; and the double spirit of Elye restide on Elisee, and with the mantel of Elye Elysee[r] smoot twies the watris of Jordon, and in the secunde tyme tho weren departid, and Elysee passide ouere. Aftirward[s] Elisee dwellide in Jerico, and heelide the watris fro bittirnesse and bareynesse, bi putting of salt in the watir. Thanne Elysee stiȝede into Betel, and as he stiȝede bi the weye, litle children ȝeden out of the citee, and seiden to him in scorn, "Thou ballard, stiȝ up!" and he curside hem in the name of God, and twey beeris ȝeden out[t] of the forest, and to-renten of hem xlij. children. After these thingis Joram, the king of Israel, and Josophat, the king of Juda, and also the thridde king, that was king of Edom, weren in desert, and hadden no watir, and weren in poynt of perisching. These thre kingis camen to Elisee for helpe, and bi spirit[u] of prophecie he bad hem make dychis, and thei siȝen neither wynd neither[v] reyn, and the botme of dychis was fillid[w] of[x] watris; and he bifore seide that God schulde bitake Moab in to the hondis of these kingis, and thei schulden distroie citees, and feeldis, and trees; and thus it was don in dede. Also Elysee multypliede a litil oile, and made a pore widewe fille[y] manye vessels therof, and bad hir paie her dettis bi[z] sum therof, and that sche and her sones schulden lyue bi the residue therof[a]. Aftirward Elysee biforeseide to a good womman, that herbouride him freely and largely, that sche schulde consceyue a sone; and whanne Elisee knew, that this sone was deed, he[b] sente his seruaunt Giesi with his staaf to reise him, and neither vois neither[c] feeling was in the chijld. Thanne Elysee entride in to a closet, where the chijld lay deed, and preiede to God, and lay on the chijld, and leide his mouth to the mouth of the chijld, and hise hondis on the chijldis hondis, and the chijld ȝoxide[d] vij. sithes, and openede his iȝen; and Elisee bitook the chijld qwyk to his modir. Also[e] Elysee, whanne hungir was in Galgala, heelyde the pot of noyful mete, bi sendinge in of mele, that no more bitternesse was in the mete. Thanne Elisee made a litil breed to suffice to an c. men, and thei lefte relijfs. Whanne the king of Sirie sente lettris to the king of Israel, that he schulde cure Naaman of his lepre, and the king of Israel to-rente his clothis for sorewe, Elysee bad, that Naaman schulde be waischen vij. sithes in the water of Jordan, and so he[f] schulde be curid; and thus it was don in deede. Thanne[g] Naaman knoulechide, that noon other God is in al the[h] erthe no[i] but oonly the God of Israel; and Elisee took noo ȝifte, ȝhe[k] freely profrede and preeside of Naaman. Thanne Giesy ran aftir Naaman, vnwytinge either[l] not consentinge his maistir, and made a lesing, that Elisee sente to him, that he schulde ȝeue a talent of syluer and double chaunging clothis to twey ȝunge men of the sones of profetis. And Naaman constreynede him to take the double that[m] he axide, and ordeynede twey children to bere bifore[n] him. But herfore Elisee seide, that the lepre of Naaman schulde cleue to Giesi and to[nn] his seede withouten ende; and Giesi ȝede out fro Eliseé, and was a mesel as snow. Whanne the sonis of prophetis ȝeden to the[o] wode, to hewe doun wode to bylde placis to hem to dwellin inne, the irun of an axe felde doun in to watir[p]; and Elisee castide[q] doun the tree, either[r] helue[s], and the irun houede[t], and was taken up therbi. Whanne the king of Sirie sette buschementis preuyly aȝens the king of Israel, Elisee warned the king of Israel therof; and whanne it was certified to the king of Sirie that Elisee telde his preuytes to the king of Israel, the king of Sirie sente a greet multitude of the[tt] oost to take Elysee, and whanne the oost cumpaside the citee Dotaym, wherinne Elysee was, God made this[u] oost blynd at the preier of Elisee, and so he ledde hem into the myddis of Samarie, and whanne the king of Israel wolde slee hem, Elisee seide nay, but bad[v] make redy a feeste to hem, and late hem go in pees to her lord. And whanne ful strong hungre was in Samarie, that wymmen eetyn her owne children, oo womman axide doom of the king aȝens another womman, that wolde not bi couenaunt bringe forth hir chijld to be etyn, whanne thei hadden eten the chijld of the first womman. Thanne the king, that weeride the heire nexte his body, to-rente his clothis for sorwe, and swoor strongly, that in that day he wolde girde of the heed of Elisee. Elisee biforeknew the comynge of this messanger to do this deede, and bad men close the dore, and suffre not him for to entre, for his lord comith anoon aftir him to reuoke his ooth and sentence. Thanne Elise seide in Goddis name, that to morewe in this tyme a buschel of wheete flour schal be for[w] oo stater, that is, a[x] litel quantite of moneye, as it were a peny, and twey buschellis of barly for oo stater, in the ȝate[y] of Samarie. And Elisee seide to a gret duk, that bileeuede[z] not this[a] word, "Thou schalt see it with thin iȝen, and schal not ete therof;" and thus it was in dede, for whanne the oost of Sirie fledde by nyȝt, for drede that God made among hem, thei lefte alle her goodis, and fledden nakid, and coueitiden oonly to saue her lyues; and whanne[b] a buschel of wheete flour was seeld on the morewe for oo[c] stater, the king made that noble duk kepere at the ȝate, and the cumpanye trade him to deeth, as Elisee bifore seide. Also Elisee spac to the womman whos sone he made to lyue, and bad hir and hir hous goo[d] a pilgrimage either[e] straunge lond, where euere sche fond couenable, for God schal bringe strong hungir on the lond vij. ȝeer and at the vij. ȝeeris ende the king restoride to hire alle hir thingis, and alle the rentis of fieldis in the tyme of hir absence. Benadab, king of Sirie, sent Asael to Elisee to enqueere whether[f] this king myȝte rekeuere of his syknesse; and God schewide to Elysee, that Benadab schulde diȝe; and Elisee wepte ful[g] sore, whanne he siȝ Asael, for God schewide to him that Asael schulde be king of Sirie, and do manye yuelis to the children of Israel, brenne of[h] her strong citees, and slee bi swerd the ȝunge men of hem, and 'hurle doun[i] the litel children of hem, and kerue wymmen with chijlde. si3t, as the hous of Acab dide; for the dou3tir of Acab was his wijf; but God nolde distroie Juda, for Dauith his seruaunt, as he bihi3te to him, to 3eue a lanterne to him and to hise sones in alle daies. Aftir these thingis Elisee bad oon of the sones of prophetis anoynte Hyeu in to king on[k] Israel, and sey to him; "Thou schalt distroie the hous of "Acab, and God schal make it as the hous of Jeroboam, and doggis schulen ete Jesabel in "the feeld of Jesrael, and noon shall berie hir." Thanne Hieu made lxx. sones of Acab to be slayn of hir keperis, and nurschers; and he killide xlij. men britheren of Ocosias; and aftir this doinge Hieu feynede hym to worschipe Baal more than Acab dide, and bi this feyning he gaderid to gidere alle the[n] prophetis, and prestis, and seruauntis of Baal `in the temple of Baal[o], and killide hem alle, and castide[p] out of the temple of Baal his ymage, and brent it, and drof it al to dust; and distroiede the hous of Baal, and made gongis for it; and so Hieu dide awey Baal `fro Israel[q]. Natheles Hieu 3ede not awey fro the synnes of Joroboam, nether[r] forsok golden caluis that weren in Betel and Dan; but for Hieu dide this veniaunce a3ens the hous of Acab, God seide, that his sones til the[s] iiij. generacoun schulen sitte on the trone of Israel. Thanne Atalia, the modir of Ocosias, whanne hir sone was deed, killede al the blood of the king, and regnide vi. 3eer. But Joas, the[t] sone of Ocosias king, was kept preuyly vj. 3eer in the temple of God, and in the vij. 3eer he was maad king bi help[u] of Joiada, the gret prest, and Atalia was slayn. Therfore Joiada made a boond of pees bitwixe God, and the king, and the peple, that hit[v] schulde be the[w] peple of God, `and bitwixe the king and the peple[x]; and the peple distroiede the auteris of Baal, and al to-braken his ymagis, and killeden Mathan, the prest of Baal, bifore the auter. This Joas bigan to regne whanne he was vij. 3eer eld, and regnede[y] xl. 3eer in Jerusalem, and dide ri3tfulnesse bifore[z] God in alle the[a] daies in whiche Joiada the prest tau3te him. And Joas bad prestis take al the money that was offrid for priys of soulis, and bi free wille, to make reperacoun of the temple; and for prestis weren neclygent in this reparacoun, Joas the king bad the[b] prestis 3eelde the[c] money to reparacoun, and take it no more. And the chaunceler of the king and the bischop Joiada heelden[d] out of the arke the[e] moneye, and 3auen it in to hond[f] of maistris[g] of werkmen, and thei spendeden it wel in this offis and necessarie reparacoun; and made noo rekenyng to souereyns, but treeteden this moneye in feith, eithir[h] good conscience. For as myche as Asael, king of Sirie, cam with his oost to werre a3ens Jerusalem, Joas, king of Juda, took alle thingis which fadris[i] hadden halewid, and whiche he hadde offrid and al the syluer that my3te be founden in the tresouris of the temple of God, and in the[k] paleys of the king, and sente al to Asael, king of Sirie; and he 3ede awey fro Jerusalem. The seruauntis of Joas sworen togidere, and killeden him, and Amasias his sone regnede for hym. Joachas the sone of[l] Hieu regnede on Israel, and dide yuel[m], as Joroboam dide. Therfore God bitook Israel in to the hondis of Asael, king of Sirie, and of Benadab his sone in alle daies, that there weren not left to Joachas of al the peple of Israel no but v. hundrid horsmen, and x. charis, and x. thousind of footmen. Thanne Joachas bisou3te God, and he 3af a sauyour to Israel, and Israel was delyuered fro the hond of the king of Sirie. Thanne Elisee felde in to gret[n] siknesse, bi which he was deed; and whanne Joas[o], king `of Israel[p], cam to him, and[q] wepte, Elisee bad hym bringe a bowe and arewis, and bad him sette his hond on the bowe; and Elisee settide[r] his hondis on the kingis hondis, and bad him scheete out at the eest wyndow opened; and Elisee seide, "This is

And Isaie seide, in Goddis name, that thei schulde not drede of thes wordis of Assiriens, for God schal sende a spirit to[n] Senacharib, and he schal here a messanger, and he schal turne aȝen into his lond; and God schal caste hym doun bi swerd in his lond; and whanne Senacherib ȝede[o] hoom to defende his lond aȝens the king of Ethiopie, he sente blasfeme lettris to Ezechie, and seide, that his God myȝte not delyuere hym fro his hondis[p]. Therfore God counfortide Ezechie bi the[q] prophete Isaie, that he schulde not dreede Senacherib, for Senacherib schal not entre into Jerusalem, neither[r] sende arwe into it, neither ocupie it, neither[r] biseege it; but God schal defende and saue Jerusalem, for himself, and for Dauith his seruaunt. And in that nyȝt the aungel of God killede in the tentis of Assiriens an c. thousind and lxxxv. thousind; and[s] in the morewe tyde Senacherib ȝede into his lond, and his owne sones killiden hym in the temple of his God Nestrach, while he worschipide Nestrach[t]. And for Ezechie wepte greetly, God curide him, and made him go into the temple on the thridde day, and encreeside xv. ȝeer to his lijf; and in singne herof God made the sunne go bacward bi ten grees[w]. Aftir this doinge the king of Babiloyne sente lettris, messengeris[x], and ȝiftis to Ezechie, and bi pride he schewide alle hise tresouris and iewelis to the messengeris. Therfor God seide bi Isaie to him, that daies schulen come, and alle thingis in thin[y] hous schulen be taken awey into Babiloyne. And Ezechie seide, "The word of God is good; oonly pees and treuthe be in my daies." Aftir Ezechie Manasses his sone regnede lv. ȝeer in Jerusalem, and dide gret yuel in Goddis siȝt, and mychel[z] ydolatrie; and the peple of Juda was disceyued of Manasses, that thei diden more yuel than hethene men, whiche God distroiede fro the face of the sones of Israel. And for Manasses dide these worste abomynacouns ouer alle thingis whiche the men of Amereys diden, and he sched ful myche innocent blood, til Jerusalem was fillid til to the mouth, God seide, that[a] he wolde bringe in yuelis on[b] Jerusalem and Juda, that, who euere heerith, bothe hise eeris tyngle; and he schal do awey Jerusalem, as tablis on boord ben wont to be don awey, but God[c] schal leue remenauntis of his eritage, and bitake hem[d] in the hond of her enemyes. Manasses diede, and was buried in the orcherd of his hous; and Amon his sone regnede for hym ij. ȝeer, and dide yuel[e] as his fadir dide, and forsook God, and seruede vnclennesses[f] and ydolis, as his fadir dide, and worschipide thoo. And his seruauntis settiden tresoun to him, and killeden hym in his hous; and the peple of the lond killiden alle men, that hadden conspyrid aȝens the kyng Amon; and for hym thei ordeyneden Josie his sone king to hem. Josie bygan to rengne whanne he was viij.[g] ȝeer eeld, and rengnede xxxj. ȝer in Jerusalem; and he dide that that was pleesaunt bifore God, and ȝede bi alle the weies of Dauith his fadir. And he distroide ydolatrours, and the hous[u] of lecchours[v] that weren in the hous of God; and he distroide auteris and hi3e placis of ydols, and ymagis, and took out boonys fro[w] sepulcris, and brente tho on the autir in Bethel, that seruide to ydolatrie. Also Josie dide awey alle templis of hi3e placis, that weren in the citee of Samarie, whiche the kingis of Israel hadden maad to terre the Lord to wraththe; and he dide to tho as he hadde do in Bethel, and he killide the prestis of hi3e placis, whiche prestis weren there ouer the auters, and he brente mennis boonys 'on tho[x] auters. Also[y] Josie made the puple to make a solempne pask, and such pask was not maad fro the daies of iugis, and alle kingis of Israel and Juda, as was this pask maad, in the xviij. 3eer of Josie. And hee dide awey spiritis spekinge in mennis wombis, and false dyuynouris, and[z] figuris of ydols, and vnclennessis, and abomynacyouns, that weren in the lond of Juda and of Jerusalem. No king bifore him[zz] neither aftir him was lyk him, that turned a3en to God in al his herte, and in al his soule, and in al his vertu, bi al the lawe of Moises. Natheles for the orrible synnes of Juda God turnede not awey fro his strong veniaunce, but seide, that he wolde take awey Juda fro his face, as he dide awey Israel, and that he wolde caste awey the citee Jerusalem[a] whiche he chees. Therfor Farao Nechao, king of Egipt, killide Josye in Magedo, and Joachas his sone was maad kyng for his fadir; and he rengnede thre monethis in Jerusalem, and dide yuel bifore God bi alle thingis whiche his fadris hadden do; and this Farao prisonyde him in Reblatha, and took tribute of the lond[b], an c. talentis of syluer, and oo talent of gold; and this Farao made king Elyachym, the sone of Josie, and turnede his name Joachym; and this Farao ledde Joachas in to Egipt; and Joachym dide yuele bifore God bi alle thingis whiche his fadris hadden do. And this Joachym was maad seruaunt thre 3eer to Nabugodnosor, king of Babilonie, and eft he rebellyde a3ens Nabugodnosor, and God sente theuis of Caldeys, and theuis of Sirie, and theuis of Moab, and theuis of the sones of Amon into Juda, that he schulde distroie it, as he spac bi his prophetis, and specialy for the synnes of Manasses. This Joachym di3ede, and his sone Joakyn rengnide iij. monethis in Jerusalem, and dide[c] yuel bifore God, as hise fadris hadden do. In that tyme the seruauntis[d] of Nabugodnosor sti3ede to[e] Jerusalem, and biseegeden it. Thanne Nabugodnosor came to Jerusalem to ouercome it, and Joakyn, and his modir, and his seruauntis, and princis, and chaumbirleyns 3eden out to Nabugodnosor, and he translatide Joakyn and his oost, x. thousind, and many crafty men in to Babiloyne; and took alle the tresouris of Goddis hous, and of the kingis hous, and bet togidere alle the[f] golden vessels, whiche[g] king Salamon hadde maad in the temple. And Nabugodnosor[h] ordeynede Mathanye, the brother of Josie, to be kinge, and clepide hym Sedechie, and he rengnede xj. 3eer in Jerusalem, and dide yuel bifore God bi alle thingis that Joachym hadde do; for God was wrooth a3ens Jerusalem and Juda, til he castide hem awey fro his face. and thanne the citee was broken, and Sedechie and his warriouris fledden bi ny3t, and the oost of Caldeys pursuede and took him, and brou3te him to Nabugodonosor in Reblatha. And Nabugodonosor spac dom with Sedechie, and killide hise sones bifore him, and puttide out his i3en, and boond him with chaynes, and brou3te hym in to Babiloyne. Thanne Nabusardan, the prince of the oost, brente Goddis hous, and the kingis hous, and the housis of Jerusalem, and distroiede the wallis[k] of Jerusalem in cumpas; and he translatide into Babiloine the residue puple of Juda, outaken a fewe pore men, vyntilieris and erthetilieris; and he brak alle the brasen vessels and of metal in the temple, and bare the metal into Babilone. Thanne Nabugodonosor made Godolye to be souereyn of the peple left in the[l] lond of Juda, and thanne[m] alle the dukis of kny3tis camen to Godolie in[n] Maspha, and he made an ooth to hem, that it schulde be wel to hem, if thei wolden serue the king of Babilone. And Ismael, that was of the kingis blood, killide Godolye, and Jewis and Caldeis that weren with him, and al the peple of Juda and the princis of kni3tis fledden[o] into Egipte, for[p] drede of Caldeys. At the laste, Euylmeradach, king of Babilone, reiside Joachyn fro presoun, and settide his trone aboue the trones[q] of othir kingis that weren with hym in Babilone; and Joachyn eet euere breed in the kingis si3t of Babilone, in alle the daies of his lijf. This prosces of Godolie and that sueth is teld largeliere[r] in the ende of Jeremye than heere in the[s] ende of Kingis. This prosces of the iiij. book of Kingis schulde stire alle men, and namely kingis and lordis, for to hate synne, as[t] ydolatrie and coueitise, and brekinge of Goddis heestis, for whiche the peple of Israel and the peple of Juda was thus punschid, and conquerid of hethene men, and for to loue vertues and kepinge of Goddis heestis, and distroyinge of opyn sinnes, for whiche manye goode kingis, as Esechie, Josie, and many othere, hadden grek thank and socour of God in manye[u] greete perels[v], and blisse of heuene withouten ende. God for his mercy graunte this blisse to vs! Amen.

Hou Sedechie was taken, and his i3en put out of Nabugodonosor.

And Filisteyis and Arabeyes brouȝten to Josophat ȝiftis and tributis, and many thousindis[d] of scheep and buckis of geet. And aftir this doinge Josophat was alyed to Acab, and ȝede with hym to bateile into Ramoth of Galaad, and iiij. c. prophetis, that weren disseyued bi a spirit of lesing, excitide Acab to this werre, and bihiȝte prosperite and victorie to him; but Mycheas, oo[e] trewe prophete of God, telde to Acab that he schulde diȝe in this bataile, and so it was indeede; and Josophat, that was in moost perel of this[f] bateile, was sauid bi Goddis help. Aftir this bateil Josophat turnede aȝeen[g] in pees to Jerusalem, and a prophete of God mette him[h], and seide, "Thou helpist "the wickid man, and art ioyned in frenschip to hem[i] that haten[k] God, and therfor thou "disseruedist[l] the wraththe of God, but goode werkis ben founden in thee, for thou didest "awey wodis fro the lond of Juda, and madist redy thin herte to seeke the Lord God of "thi fadris." Therfore Josophat dwellide in Jerusalem, and eft he ȝide out to the peple fro Bersabe til to the hil of Effraym, and clepide hem aȝen to the Lord God of her fadris; and he ordeynede iugis of the lond in alle stronge citees of Juda bi ech place; and he comaundide thus to the iugis, "See ȝe, what ȝe owen to do, for ȝe vsen the dom not of man "but of the Lord, and what euer thing that[m] ȝe[n] schal[o] deme, schal turne into ȝou; the "dreede of the Lord be with ȝou, and do ȝe alle thingis with diligence; for whi neither "wickidnesse, neither[p] taking of persoones, neither coueitise of ȝiftis, is anentis ȝoure Lord "God." And in Jerusalem Josophat ordeynede dekenes and[q] prestis, and princis of meynes of Israel, that thei schulde deme to the dwelleris therof the doom and cause[r] of God; and he comaundide to hem and seide, "Thus ȝe schulen do in the drede of the Lord feithfully, "and in[s] a perfit herte; ech cause that cometh to ȝou of ȝoure britheren that dwellen in "her citees, bitwixe kinrede and kynrede, where[t] euere is questioun either[u] doute of the "lawe of comaundement of cerymonies of iustifijngis, schewe ȝee to hem, that thei do not[v] "synne aȝens the Lord, and wraththe either[w] veniaunce come not on ȝow, and on ȝoure "britheren; therfore do ȝe thus and ȝe schule 'not do[x] synne; and[y] Amarie, ȝoure prest "and[z] bischop, schal be souereyn in these thingis that perteynyn to God." Aftir these thingis the sones of Amon, and the sones of Moab, and with men of Ydume, weren gaderid togidere to werrye[a] aȝens Josophat. Thanne Josophat ȝaf him al to beseche God, and prechide fasting to al Juda, and al Juda was gaderid to biseeche the Lord; and Josophat knoulechide, that he hadde not[b] power to aȝenstonde so greet a[c] multitude of enemyes. Thanne God coumfortide him and his peple bi a prophete, that thei schulde not dreede this greet multitude of enemyes, for God himself schulde fiȝte and ouercome her enemyes, without strook of his peple; and so it was in dede. At the laste, Josophat made frenschipe with Ocosie, king of Israel, whois werkis weren ful yuele, and thei weren felowis to make schippis, that schulden go into Tarsis. Therfor God bi his prophete seide to Josophat, "For thou haddist boond of pees with Ocosie, God hath smyte thi werkis," and the[d] schippis ben al to-broken and myȝten not go into Tarsis. And God smoot Joram with vncurable sorewe of wombe twey ȝer, so that he rotid on erthe, and castide[i] out hise entrailis, and diȝede in worst syknesse. And his sone Ocosias rengnyde for him, and dide yuele as the hous of Acab, for whi his modir excitide him to do wickidly; and thei of the hous of Acab weren his councelers into his deth, and he ȝede in the[k] counceil of hem. And therfore Hieu, whanne he distroyede the hous of Acab, killide Ocosie, and the prince of Juda, and the sones of the britheren of Ocosie. After these thingis Joas waas maad king, bi the helpe of Joiada the prest, and the curside womman Atalia was slayn. The prestis and grete[l] men of the peple brouȝten out of Goddis hous the sone of the king, and settiden a coroun on his heed, and ȝauen in his hond the lawe to be kept, and maden him king. And Joiada made couenaunt bitwixen him and al the peple and the king, that thei schulden be the peple of God, that is, forsake ydolatrie, and kepe treuly Goddis lawe. Therfore al the peple ȝede into[m] the hous of Baal, and distroyeden it, and braken the auters and symylacris, either ymagis of him, and thei killeden bifore the auteer Mathan, the prest of Baal. This Joas dide wel in the tyme of Joiada, and reparilide the temple of Jerusalem, that was distroyed bi Atalia and[n] hir sones; but aftir the deeth of Joiada he was flaterid bi the princis[o] of Juda, and thei felden to idolatrie, and forsoken the temple of God. And the wraththe of God was maad aȝens Juda and Jerusalem for his synne, and he sente prophetis to hem, that thei schulden turne aȝen to God, and thei nolde heere these profetis. And Sacarie, the prest and sone[p] of Joiada, repreuede hem for this synne, and thei stonyden hym to deth[q] in the purseynt of Goddis hous, by comaundement of the king. And whanne the ȝeer was endid the oost of Syrie stiȝede aȝens hym, and cam in to Juda and Jerusalem, and killide alle the princis of the peple, and senten al the prey in to Damask to the king. And certis whanne a[r] ful litil noumbre of men of Sirie was comen, God bitook in[s] her hondis a multitude withouten ende, for thei hadden forsake the Lord God of her fadris, and thei vsiden schameful domes in Joas, and ȝeden forth, and leftyn him in greet sorewis; and his seruaunts risen aȝens him for veniaunce of the blood of the sone of Joiada the prest, and killiden him in his bed; and Joas was deed, and Amasie his sone rengnide for him.

Hou the children of Israel restoriden aʒen to Juda the prey bi counceil of Obed the prophete, and Acas was dced in his grete anguysh.

" greet veniaunce of the Lord neiʒeth to ʒou." Therfore the princes of Israel maden the werriouris to forsake the prey, and alle thingis whiche thei hadden take; and the princis clothiden hem that weren nakid, and refreschiden hem with mete, and drinke, and anoyntyng of oile, for traueile, and senten hem hoom benyngly. Thanne king Acas sente to the king of Assiriens, and axide help; and Ydumeys camen, and killiden manye men of Juda, and tooken greet prey; and Filisteys tooken many citees of Juda, and dwelliden in tho. And God made low the puple of Juda for Acas the king of Israel, for he hadde maad `him nakid of help[d], and for he hadde dispisid God. And God brouʒte aʒens him[e] Teglath Falasar, the king of Assiriens, that turmentide[f] him, and distroiede, for noon aʒenstood. Therfore Acas spoilide Goddis hous, and the hous of kingis[g] and of[gg] princis, and ʒaf ʒiftis to the king of Assiriens; and natheles it profitide[h] no thing to him; and Acas, in the tyme of his anguysch, encreside dispising aʒens God, and offride sacrifices[hh] to the[i] goddis of Damask, and he seide, " The goddis of Sirie `helpen hem[j], whiche goddis I schal plese[k] with sacri-

And he opynede the ʒatis of Goddis hous, in[r] the firste ʒeer of his rewme, and made prestis and dekenes to clense and halewe the[s] temple and auter[t] of God, with al the vessels and purtenaunsis of the temple; and he gaderide togidere alle the princis of the citee, and stiʒide into[u] Goddis hous; and thei offriden vij. boolis and[uu] vij. rammes, vij. lambren, and[v] vij. buckis of geet, for synne, for the rewme, for the[w] sentuarie, and for Juda. And he seide to the prestis, the[x] sones of Aaron, that thei schulden offre on the auter of God, and thei diden so. And he ordeynede dekenys in the hous of God, with symbals and sautrees and harpis, bi[y] the ordynaunce of Dauith, and of Gad, the prophete of the king, and of Nathan the prophete; for it was the comaundement of God bi the hond of hise prophetis. And dekenys[z] stooden and heelden the orgenys of Dauith, and prestis heldyn trumpis. And Esechie comaundide that thei schulden offre brent sacrifices[a] on the auter, and whanne brent[b] sacrifices weren offrid, thei bigunnen `to singe[c] heryingis[d] to God, and to[e] sounne with trumpis and diuerse orgenys, whiche Dauith the king of Israel hadde maad redy for to sounne. And Esechie and the princis comaundiden to the dekenys that thei schulden herie God with the wordis of Dauith, and of Asaph the prophete. And Esechie sente to al Israel and Juda, and wroot epistlis to Effraym and Manasses, that thei schulden come to Goddis hous in Jerusalem, and make pask to the Lord God of Israel. And it pleside the[f] king and al the multitude, and thei demeden to sende messangeris into al Israel, fro[g] Bersabee til to Dan, that thei schulden come and make pask to the Lord God `of Israel[gg] in Jerusalem. And currowris ʒeden out with epistlis, bi comaundement[h] of the king and of hise princes, `in to[i] al Israel and Juda, as the king hadde comaundid, and precheden, " Sones of Israel, turne ʒe[k]

" this lond." Therfore currouris ȝeden swiftly[p] fro citee 'in to[q] citee, by the lond of Effraym and of Manasses 'til to[r] Sabulon, and thei scorneden and bymowiden the messengeris; natheles summe of Aser and of[s] Manasses and of[t] Sabulon assentiden to the counceil, and camen in to Jerusalem. Goddis hond was maad in Juda, that he ȝaf to hem oon herte, and thei diden the word of God bi comaundement of the king and of princis, and many puplis weren gaderid in Jerusalem, to make the[u] solempnite of pask in the ij. monthe; and thei distroieden the auteris that weren in[v] Jerusalem, and thei distroieden alle thingis in which encense was offrid to ydolis, and castiden forth[w] in to the stronde of Cedron. Whanne these thingis weren halewid riȝtly, al Israel ȝede out, that was founden in the citees of Juda, and thei braken symylacris, either[x] ymagis, and hewiden[y] doun[z] wodis, and distroieden hiȝe placis and auteris, and[a] not oonly of al Juda and Beniamyn, but also of Effraym and Manasses, til thei distroieden thoo outtirly. And Esechie ordeynede cumpanyes of prestis and of dekenis, bi her departingis, ech man in his owne offis, as wel of prestis as of dekenis, to brent sacrifices[b] and peesible[c] sacrifices, that thei schulden mynystre and knouleche and singe in the ȝatis of the castels, eithir[d] oostis, of the Lord. And Esechie comaundide to the puple to ȝeue to prestis and deknes her partys, that is, the firste fruytis and tithis, that thei myȝten ȝeue tent to the lawe of God. And there is teld myche of the paying and deeling of tithis and other[e] hooly thingis. Thanne it sueth hou Sennagerib blasfemede God of Israel, and hou Esechie counfortide the puple aȝens his blasfemye and pride. And[f] Esechie and Ysaie the prophete preieden aȝens the blasfemye, and crieden til[g] in to heuene; and God sente his aungel, and he[h] killide ech strong man, and werriour, and prince of the oost of 'the king of[i] Assiriens, and he[k] turnide aȝen with schenschipe into his lond, and hise owne sones killiden him bi swerd. And God sauide Esechie and the dwelleris of Jerusalem fro the hond of Senacherib, king of Assiriens, and fro the hond of alle men, and ȝaf to hem reste bi cumpas. Aftir these thingis Esechie was syk to the deeth, and he preiede to God, and God herde him. And the herte of Esechie was reisid to pride, and wraththe was maad aȝens him, and aȝens Juda, and aȝens Jerusalem. And aftir he was meekid, for his herte was reysid, bothe he and the dwelleris of Jerusalem weren mekid, and therfore the veniaunce of God cam not in the daies of Esechie. And Esechie was ful riche and noble, and in alle hise werkis he dide welsumly, what euer thing he wolde. Natheles in the message of princes[l] of Babilone, that weren sente to him to axe of the grete wondir that bifel on erthe, God forsook him, that he was temptid, and alle thingis weren knowen that weren in his herte. Thanne[m] diȝede Esechie, and Manasses his sone rengnide in Jerusalem lv. ȝeer. And Manasses dide yuele bifore God, bi abomynacioun of hethen men, which God distroiede bifore the sones of Israel, and he byldide hiȝe placis, and made auteris to[n] Baalym, and dide manyfold ydolatrie, and seruede to wicche craftis, and sette[o] ydolis in the temple of God; and he disseyuede the puple of Juda and the dwelleris of Jerusalem, that thei diden yuel more than hethene men, which the Lord hadde distroied fro the face of the sones of Israel. And God spac to him and to his puple, and thei nolden take heede; therfore he brouȝte on hem the princis[p] of the oost of the king of Assiriens; and thei tooken Manasses, and bounden him with chaynes and gyues, and ledde him into Babilone; and aftir that he was angwischid, he preiede his Lord God, and he dide penaunce gretly bifore the God[q] of his fadris, and he preiede hertily, and bisouȝte God, and God herde his preier, and brouȝte[r] him aȝen in to Jerusalem, into his rewme. And Manasses knew that the Lord himself is God, and he dide awey alien goddis, and symylacris, either[s] idolis fro Goddis hous, and distroiede auteris whiche he hadde maad in the hil of Goddis hous[t] and in Jerusalem, and castide alle out of the citee, and he restoride the auteer of God, and offride on it sacrificis[u] and herying[uu], and comaundide[v] the puple of Juda to serue the Lord God of Israel; and natheles the puple offride ȝit[w] in hiȝe placis to her Lord God. Manasses diȝede, and Amon his sone regnide for him ij. ȝer in Jerusalem, and he dide yuel in Goddis siȝt, as Manasses his fadir hadde do, and offride and seruede to alle idolis, which Manasses hadde maad; and he reuerenside not the face of God, as Manasses reuerenside, and he dide many greetere trespasis; and whanne his seruauntis hadden conspirid aȝens him, thei killiden him; and the puple killide hem that hadden slayn Amon, and made Josie his sone king for him, and he regnide xxxj. ȝeer in Jerusalem. Josie[x] dide that that was riȝtful in Goddis siȝt, and ȝede in the weies of Dauith, his fadir, and[y] bowide neither to the riȝt side neither to the lift side. In the viij. ȝeer of his rewme, whanne he was ȝit a chijld, he bigan to seke the God of Dauith, his fadir, and in the xij. ȝeer, aftir that he bigan, he clenside Juda and Jerusalem fro hiȝe placis, and ymagis and ydolis. Thei distroieden bifore him the auters of Baalym, and the symylacris that weren put aboue; he kittide doun, and altobrak wodis and grauen ymagis, and scateride the relijfis on the biriels of hem that weren wont to offre. Ferthermore he brente the boonys of prestis in the auteris of idolis, and he[z] clenside Juda and Jerusalem, and distroiede alle ydolis[a] in the citees of Manasses and of[aa] Effrahym and of[aa] Symeon til to Neptalym. In the xviij. ȝeer of his rewme, whanne the lond and the temple of God was clensid, he sente worthi men to reparaile Goddis hous, and so thei diden in deede. And Elchie, the gret prest, ȝaf to Saphan, the scriueyn and solempne messenger[b], the book of Goddis lawe, and he bar it to the king; and whanne the king hadde herd the wordis of the lawe, he to-rente hise clothis, and he comaundede Elchie and othere grete[c] men to goo, and preie the Lord for the king, and for the resydues of Israel and of Juda, on alle the words of the book of Goddis lawe; " for whi greet " veniaunce of God hath droppid on vs, for oure fadris kepten not the wordis of God, that " thei diden alle thingis that ben writen in this book." Therfore Elchie, and thei that weren sent togidere of the king, ȝeden to Olda, a profetesse, the[d] wijf of Sellum; and God seide bi hir that he schal bringe in on this place and dwelleris[e] therof yuelis, and alle cursinges that ben writen in this book of Goddis lawe; for thei forsoken God and sacrificiden[f] to alyen[g] goddis, to terre him to wrathfulnesse, in alle the werkis of her hondis; " but for " thou, king of Juda, herdist the wordis of the book, and were meekid in Goddis siȝt, and " weptist and to-rentist[h] thi clothis, I haue herd thee," seith God, " and thou schalt be born " in to thi sepulcre in pees, and thin iȝen schulen[i] not see al the yuel which Y schal bringe " in on this place, and on the dwelleris therof." And whanne Josie hadde herd these wordis, he clepide togidere alle the eldre men of Juda and of Jerusalem, and he stiȝide in to Goddis hous, and alle men[j] of Juda and the dwelleris of Jerusalem stiȝiden togidere, prestis and deknis, and al the puple fro the leeste `til to[k] the moste, and in audiense of hem the king redde in Goddis hous alle the wordis of the book; and he stood in his trone, eithir[l] seete of doom, and smoot boond of pees bifore God, that he schulde go aftir God, and kepe hise heestis, and witnessingis[m], and iustifyingis, in al his herte and al[mm] his soule, and do tho thingis that ben writen in that[n] book whiche he hadde red. And he chargide gretly on this thing alle men that weren founden in Jerusalem and Beniamyn; and the dwelleris of Jerusalem diden bi the[o] couenaunt of the[p] Lord God of her fadris. Therfore Josie dide awey alle abomynaciouns fro alle the cuntreys of the sones of Israel, and made alle men, that weren residue in Israel[q], to serue her Lord God; in alle the daies of his lijf thei ȝeden not awey fro the Lord God of her fadris. Aftir that Josie hadde reparelid the temple, Necao, king of Egipt, stiȝide to fiȝte in Cartamys, and Josie ȝede forth aȝens him, and the king of Egipt seide to Josie, "I come not to day aȝens "thee, but I fiȝte aȝens another hous, to whiche God bad and[x] made[y] me go in haste; ther- "fore ceese, thou king of Juda, to day aȝens God, which is with me, lest he[z] sle thee." Josie nolde turne aȝen, but made himself redy to bataile aȝens the king of Egipt, and assentide not to the wordis of the king of Egipt, spoken bi Goddis mouth. Therfore Josie was slayn of the king of Egipt, and the peple of the lond made Joacas his sone king in Jerusalem. He[a] regnide iij. moonthis in Jerusalem, and the king of Egipt puttide[b] him doun, and condempnide the lond of Juda in an c. talentis of syluer, and in a[c] talent of gold, and made Eliachym his brothir kyng[d] for him on Juda and Jerusalem, and turnide his name Joachym. He regnide xj. ȝeer in Jerusalem, and dide yuel bifore God. Therfore Nabugodonosor took him, and ledde him boundyn with chaynes into Babilone, and baar thidir the vessels of Goddis temple; and Joakin his sone rengnide for him iij. moonthis and x. daies in Jerusalem, and dide yuel in Goddis siȝt. Thanne Nabugodonosor sente men that ledden hym into Babilone and bare[e] out the[f] preciouseste[g] vessels of Goddis hous; and Nabugodonosor made Sedechie king on Juda and Jerusalem[h]. He[i] rengnide xj. ȝeer in Jerusalem, and dide yuel in Goddis siȝt, neithir was[k] aschamyd of the face of Jeremye, the prophete, that spac to him of Goddis mouth. He brak the ooth maad too Nabugodnosor; therfore Nabugodnosor cam and took hym, and ledde him and alle the vessels and the[l] tresouris of Goddis hous and of the king[m] and princis into Babilone, and killide the puple, and distroiede and brente Jerusalem; and the puple that was left alyue was led into Babilone, and seruede the king and his sones, til the king of Perseys rengnide, and til l.[n] ȝer weren fillid[o], bi Goddis word seid[oo] bi the mouth of Jeremye. And Cirus, king[p] of Perseys, comaundide to be prechid, ȝhe bi writinge in al his rewme, that Jewis schulden turne aȝen into Judee.

Of the pask of Josie, and how he was slayn, in his defaute, of the king of Egipt.

Sedechie dide yuel, [and] therfore Nabogodonosor ledde him into Babiloyne.

Baal, either[g] of the deuil, in the temple of God. Specialy lordis setten idolis in Goddis hous, whanne thei maken vnworthi prelatis either[g] curatis in the chirche; for whi such vnable prelatis either[g] curatis ben idolis, as God seith in xj.[h] c̃. of Zacarie to an vnable prelat, "A! thou schepherde, and idole, forsakinge the floc;" wherfor Erchedekene in Rosarie[i], which is oon of the famouseste[k] doctouris, and[l] of the popis lawe, writith thus, "an yuel "prelat is seid a rorynge lyoun, and a wolf rauysching prey;" and in the[m] xxxiiij. c̃. of Esechiel, he is seid to feede him[n] self and not the[o] scheep; also he is seid to seke his owne profitis temporal, therfore he is[p] not of Goddis children, as Austyn seith in[q] viij.[r] cause, j. questioun, c[o]. sunt quidam, and for this thing power schal be taken awey fro him, as God seith in the[s] xxxiiij. c̃. of Ezechiel. Also an yuel prelat is seid a wolf, as the lawe witnessith in lxxxiij.[t] distincioun c[o]. nichil; also for defaute of gouernaile he is seid a vnchaast dogge, as Austyn witnessith in ij.[u] cause vij.[v] questioun, c[o]. qui nec; also he is a[w] crowe, either[x] a rauen, for the blacknesse of synnes, as the lawe witnessith there, in c[o]. non omnis; also he is seid fonned salt, not prophitable to eny thing, as the lawe witnessith there, in c[o]. non omnis; also he is seid an hog, as the lawe witnessith in xliij.[y] distinctioun, in[z] c[o]. in mandatis; also he is seid a cherl of cherlysched[a] of yuel lijf, as the lawe witnessith in xlvij.[b] distinctioun, in the bigynnyng; also he is seid a capoun, for he hath the manere of an hen, for as a[c] capoun crowith not, so an yuel prelat crowith not in preching; also an yuel prelat gendrith not bi preching of Goddis word, neithir he fi3tith for hise sogetis; also as the[d] capoun clepith not hennis, so an yuel prelat clepith not pore men to mete; also as a capoun makith fat himself, so an yuel prelat makith fat himself. Therfore sithen he seekith plenteuousnesse[e], metis[f], and richessis, he schal be put into the[g] fijer of helle, as Jerom witnessith on Mychee, and[h] in the[i] xxxv. distinctioun, c[o]. ecclesie principes. Erchedekene writith[k] al this in xliij.[l] distinctioun, in c[o]. sit rector, on the[m] word muti. Also a doumb prelat is an ydol, and[n] not a very prelat; a doumb prelat is not a very prelat, sithen he vsith not the offis of a[o] prelat, but he hath oonly the licnesse of a prelat, as an ydol that vsith not the offis of a man is oonly lijk a man, but it is noo man; therfore[p] suche doumbe prelatis moun ri3tfully be seid[q] symylacris, either[r] ydolis, of whiche[s] it is seid in the vi. c[o]. of Baruk, "the trees of hem ben maad fair of a carpenter, and tho ben araied with "gold and syluer, and moun not speke," and thei that maken suche prelatis ben lijk hem, whiche makeris schulen be dampned with suche prelatis, bi that word of Dauith, "thei that "maken tho ben maad lijk tho." But marke wel, that hethene men hadden symylacris of vj. kyndis, that is, of cley, of tree, of bras, of stoon, of syluer, and of gold; we moun fynd these vj. kyndis in yuel prelatis; for whi symylacris of cley ben fleschly prelatis, of whiche God seith in the sautir, "I schal do hem awey as the cley of streetis;" symylacris of tree ben vnwise prelatis and boistous[t] and without wit, of which it is seid in holy scripture, "a "tree is wlappid in siluer;" and these ben seid to be maad of nou3t in to prelatis, thes ben beestis clepid chymeres, that han a part of ech beest, and suche ben not no but oonly in opynyoun, either speche, and not in dede, neither in kynde; symylacris of bras ben thei, that han oonly worldly eloquence, for whi brasse 3eueth greet[u] soun, in i.[v] pistle to Corinth.[w], xiij. c̃. "if I speke in the langagis of men and of aungels, and I have not[x] charite, I am "maad as bras sounnynge;" symylacris of stoon ben thei, that ben broken fro ri3tfulnesse and vertu, for temporal strengthe, these prelatis ben not the stoon which[y] is set into the heed of the corner, but these ben the stoon[z] of hirtyng and of sclaundre; symylacris of syluer ben thei that ben maad bi moneye, eithir[a] richessis[b], whiche prelatis seyn, what wolen

3e[c] 3eue to vs, and we schulen[d] bitraie Crist to 3ou; golden symylacris ben thei[e] that ben maad oonly for worldly nobleie, for whi[f] gold singnefieth nobley, and therfore the heed of the ymage of Nabugodonosor was of gold in ij.[g] c̃. of Daniel. Erchedekene tellith al this in xliij.[h] distinctioun, c°. sit rector, on the[i] word mutus. Thou3 this doctour of the popis lawe be pleyn and scharp, he seith treuthe sesonable[k], for the chirche now acordith[l] with hooly writ, and resoun, and comun doctouris of holy scripture; for in xi.[m] c̃. of Sacariee, God clepith an yuel prelat an ydol, and in Ezechiel and other prophetis he licneth tyrauntis and raueynouris to lyouns, woluis, beeris, and othere vnresonable beestis, to dispise her synne. Here lordis and other prelatis moun see in party, hou perilous it is to ordeyne yuele prelatis eithir[n] curatis in the chirche, for as seint Gregory seith, in i.° part of Pastoralis, ij.[p] c°. noo man harmeth more in the chirche, than he that doth weiwardly, and holdith the name of ordre[q], eithir[r] of[s] holynesse; and the lawe seith de electiouibus, c°. nichil, that no thing harmeth more the[t] chirche of God, than that vnworthi men be taken to the gouernaile of soulis; and Grostede seith in his sermoun Premonitus a venerabili patre, that to make vnable prelatis eithir[u] curatis in the chirche of God, is to haue come to the hi3est degree of trespasis[v]; also in his sermoun Dominus noster Jhesus Cristus, he writeth thus to the pope, "he that bitakith the cure of soulis to a man vnmy3ti, vnkunnynge, either[w] not "wilful to kepe[x] duly the soulis, is gilty of alle the soulis, thou3 eny ascapith[y], and[z] is sauid "bi Goddis grace, and he that bitakith the cure of soulis to him that is opinly vnable "therto, techith to sette more pris bi vnresonable beestis than by men, and for to loue "more erthly thingis, that passyn schortly, than everlastinge thingis, and[a] more than the "deeth and blood of Goddis sone; and he that 3eueth thus the cure of soulis to vnable "men[b], is werse than Eroude, that pursuede Crist, and worse thanne Jewis and hethene "men, that crucifieden Crist." Grostede seith this pleynly, and preueth it opinly bifore the pope and al his clergie; and thei that procuren beneficis and[c] richessis to men[d], haten hem to whiche[e] thei procuren thus, as if thei procured hem to be set in the cop of the chirche, in whirlwijndis and greet tempestis. Grostede seith this[f] in his sermoun Scriptum est de leuitis; and he that is necligent to drawe soulis out of the pit of synne, as myche as he may, bi the ordre of lawe, and he that lettith him of his werk, sleeth the soulis; and he that settith more prijs bi a fleschly scheep than a goostly scheep, that is, mannis soule, settith more pris bi a[g] peny than bi the lijf of Goddis sone, which is worth al this world. A recheles curat, and[h] that sleeth sogettis[i] bi[k] yuel ensaumple, and withdrawing of Goddis word, is worse than vnresonable beestis, and he is wrse than the crucifieris of Crist[l], for he crucifieth him in hise membris. Goode counceilouris thei ben aloone, that ben wijse men, and drede God, for whi alle coueitouse men ben foolis, and vnwijse men, and to be led bi the counceil of hem is to dispose[m] of[n] henne cotis bi the counceil of foxis, and to[o] dispose of foldis of scheep bi the counceil of woluis. Grostede seith this in a sermoun Premonitus a venerabili patre. See, 3e lordis and prelatis, that maken vnable curatis, for fleschly affeccioun and 3iftis[p], and specialy for pleyinge at the bere, and othere vnleeful iapis, what tresoun 3e doon to God, and what harm to Cristis chirche and 3oure auaunseeis; 3e maken orrible abomynacoun of discoumfort stoonde in the hooly place, for 3e make anticrist to stonde at the hi3e auter, in the stede of Crist, and trete the holy sacrament of Cristis flesch and his[q] blood ful vnworthily, and as Parisience seith, whanne 3e maken a coueitouse prest to stonde at the auter, 3e maken a maldworp stonde[r] there, in the stede of Crist; and whanne 3e maken a fonned bischop, that can not and[s] loueth not Goddis lawe, stonde my-

trid at the auter, ȝe make an horned asse stonde at the auter, in the[t] stede of Crist; and so of othere vnresonable beestis, as lyouns, wluis, beeris, apis, dragouns, hoggis, horsis, doggis; and othere viciouse prestis, proude, coueitouse, raueynouris, wrathful, ypocritis, trecherouse, glotenouse, lecherouse, enuyouse, and bacbiteris; and[u] ȝe transfiguren Satanas into an[v] aungel of li3t, whanne[w] ȝe maken curatis either[x] prelatis, that ben contrarie to Crist, to ocupie the offis of bischop, abbot, either[x] of[y] prest. Lordis and prelatis, that han sett suche idolis in Goddis hous, as Manasses dide, sue ȝe Manasses in very repentaunce, and making of[z] amendis to God and men. Also lordis and prelatis exciten strongly men to[a] ydolatrie, for thei sweren custumably nedelesly, and ofte vnavisily and fals, bi the membris of God, of[b] Crist, and bi seintis, in so myche that ech lord and greet[c] prelat comynly makith to[d] him an ydole of sum seint, whom he worschipith more than God; for comunly thei sweren bi oure Lady of Walsingham, seint Joon Baptist[e], seint Edward, seint Thomas of Caunterbury, and such othere seintis, and chargen more this ooth than thou3 thei sweren by the Hooly Trinite; and in al this thei onoren more these seintis than thei onouren the Hooly Trinite. Thou3 it were leeueful to swere bi seintis, this is ydolatrie, to charge more an ooth maad bi suche seintis than bi God Almy3ty, either[f] bi the Hooly Trinite; natheles Crisostom witnessith on the v. c°. of Matheu, that to swere bi eny creature, is to do idolatrie; for as Jerom there[g], and Decrees[h], in xxij. cause, j[a]. questione, c°. si quis per capillum, and c°.[i] next bifore, and Decretals de jure jurando, c°. et[k] si Christus, witnessen pleynly, to swere bi a creature is a3ens Goddis comaundement; and therfore Crist in the v. c°. of Math., comaundith to swere[l], not bi heuene, neither[m] bi erthe[n], and vndirstondith bi heuene and erthe creaturis of heuene and creaturis of erthe; and in al the old lawe it is not founden, where God grauntith to swere bi eny creature, but oonly bi his owne name, either[o] bi himself; and therfore the wise man seith in the[p] xxiij. c°. of[q] Ecclesiastici "a man that swerith mychil[r] schal be fillid with wickidnesse, and veniaunce schal not go "awey fro his hous;" and eft he seith, "thi mouth be not customable to swering, for whi "myche fallyng is in it; the nemyng of God be not customable in thi mouth," that is, to swere bi his name in veyn, either[s] fals, either[t] for an yuel ende; "and be thou not medlid "with the names of seintis," that is, to swere bi seintis, "for thou schalt not be giltlees of "hem." Here lordis and prelatis moun see how thei don opin ydolatrie, whanne[u] thei gessen to onoure seintis, and hire opin deedis of ydolatrie and blasfemye ben opin bookis of ydolatrie and blasfemye[v] to hire sugetis; therfore, as Gregory seith in ij.[w] bok of Pastrals v.[x] c°., prelatis ben worthi so many dethis, hou manye ensaumplis[y] of perdiscoun thei senden to sogettis, and in xxv.[z] c°. of[a] Numery, God bad Moises hange alle the princis in iebatis a3ens the sunne, for the peple of Israel dide leccherie and idolatrie[b] bi ensaumple[c] and suffraunce of hem. Now in Engelond it[d] is a comyn protecciouu a3ens persecusciouu[e] of prelatis and of[f] summe lordis, if a man is customable to swere nedeles, and[g] fals, and vnauisid, bi the boonys, nailes, and sidis, and other membris of Crist, and[h] to be proud and leccherous, and speke[i] not of Goddis lawe, and repreue not synne aboute him; and to[k] absteyne fro oothis nedeles and vnleeueful, and to eschewe pride, and speke[l] onour of God and of his lawe, and repreue synne bi weie of charite, is[m] matir and cause now whi prelatis and summe lordis sclaundren men, and clepen hem lollardis, eretikis[n], and[o] riseris of debate and of tresoun a3ens the king; now Manasses settith idolis opinly in the temple of God, and sterith men gretly to do idolatrie, and cherischen hem that breken opinly Goddis heestis, and punysche hem soore, as hethene men either[p] eretikis, that bisien hem to lerne, kepe, and teche Goddis heestis; the iij. tyme lordis and prelatis bothe schedden innocent blood, as Manasses dide, for thei waastyn folily hire goodis in wakingis and pleyingis[q] bi niȝt[r], and in rere-soperis and othere[s] vanites, and taken grete and vnmesurable taxis of the comyns; and lesse[t] lordis and prelatis doon greet extorciouns to pore men, and taken pore mennis goodis, and paien litil either nouȝt and out of tyme for tho. Therfore, as[u] Mychee the prophete seith in iij.[v] c̃., thei hyilden pore men, and eten her flesch; and Grostede declarith wel this[w] in his dicte 'that bygynneth thus[x], sint lumbi vestri precinti, and in the[y] xiij.[z] dicte; and God seith in the[a] Sautir of suche tirauntis, "thei deuouren my puple as the mete "of breed." How myche blood lordis scheden in werris, for pride and coueitise, by counceil of false prelatis, confessouris, and prechouris, it passith mannis wit to telle fully in this lijf; but of scheding of blood and sleeing of pore men, bi withdrawing of almes, and in ȝeuynge it to[b] dede stockis, either[c] stoonis, either[c] to riche clerkis and feyned religiouse, were to speke now, if a man hadde the spirit of goostly strengthe. Now men knelyn, and preien, and offren faste to dede ymagis, that han neither hungir neither[d] coold; and dispisen, beten, and sleen Cristen men, maad to the ymage and lycnesse of the Holy Trynite. What onour of God is this to knele and offre to an ymage, maad of synful mannis hondis, and to dispise and robbe the ymage[e] maad of Goddis hondis, that is, a cristen man, either[f] a cristen woman. Whanne men ȝeue not almes to pore nedy men, but to dede ymagis, either[f] riche clerkis, thei robbyn pore men of her due[g] porcoun, and needful sustenaunce[h] assingned to hem of God himself; and whanne suche offereris to dede ymagis robben pore men, thei robben Jhesu Crist, as he seith in xxv.[i] c°. of Math., "that, that ȝe diden to oon of these[k] leeste "of myne, ȝe diden to me," and if thei schulen be dampned that ȝeuen not mete and drinke, and othere nescessaries to pore men, as Crist seith, where schulen thei become that robben pore men, and so Jhesu Crist himself; and if these tweyne, that ȝeuen not lyflode, and that robben pore men, schulen be dampned so depe in helle, where schulen false techeris, stireris[l], and confessouris bicome, that stiren lordis and riche men to robbe thus pore men, and to[m] do this[n] vndir the[o] colour of excellent almes and holynesse? But[p] morne we sore for this cursidnesse, and preie we to God with al oure herte, that sithen lordis and prelatis suen Manasses in these opyn synnes, God stire hem to sue Manasses in very penaunce, and make amendis to God and men, lest oure reume be conquerid of aliens, either[q] hethen men, for these opyn synnes and many moo.

enemyes; and how the enemyes of Jewis purposiden[y] with strong hond to slee Jewis preuely, and distroie[z] hire werk. Thanne half the part of ȝunge men made the werk, and half the part was redy to bateyle; with oon hond thei maden the werk, and with the other[a] thei helden the swerd; and eche of hem that bildide was gird with his swerd. Thanne it sueth how Neemye, duk of the puple, dide freely his offis, and took noo costis assingned to the duk, and he dide thus for the[b] pouert of the puple. Aftir this doinge Esdras redde in the book of Goddis lawe, fro the morewitide til to noon bifore the[c] multitude of men and wymmen, and dekenes made silence in the puple to here the lawe; and Esdras redde in the book of Goddis lawe fro the firste day 'til to[d] the laste. Thanne the children of Israel camyn togidere in fasting and in sackis, either[e] heiris, and erthe was on hem, and the seed of the sones of Israel was departid fro ech alyen sone, and thei stoden bifore the Lord, and knoulechiden her synnes, and the wickidnessis[ee] of hire fadris, and thei risiden[f] togidere to stonde, and thei redden in the book of lawe[g] of hire God fouresithis in the day, and fouresithis in the ny3t thei[h] knoulechiden and heryeden hire Lord God; and dekenes cryeden with gret vois to hire Lord God, and baddin the puple rise and blesse God. Thanne[i] sueth the solempne confessioun of Esdras, how he knoulechide first the glorious werkis of God, and aftirward the orrible synnes of al[k] the puple, and of hire fadris; and thanne al the peple made couenaunt, and swor to kepe Goddis lawe, and to[l] bie not in the sabat and haliday of hem that brou3ten viteilis to selle; and[m] thei bihi3ten to paie the firste fruitis to prestis, and tithis to the[n] dekenes, and to bringe al this to the temple of God. At the laste Neemye suffride neither Jewis neither[o] straungeris sille neither[o] bie in the sabotis, not oonly in Jerusalem, but neither in placis ny3 the wallis; and he rebuykede, and curside, and beet men, and made hem ballid, that token alien wommen to be[p] hire wyues, as of Asotus, of Amon, and of Moab; and chargide[q] hem greetly in the Lord, that thei schulden[r] not 3eue hire dou3tris to the sones of hethen men, and take nou3t[s] of the dou3tris of hethen men to hire owne sones, and to hem self. This proces of Esdras and of Neemye schulde styre vs to be bisy to biylde vertues in oure soule[t], aftir turnyng a3en fro caitifte of synne[u], and to fi3te a3ens temptaciouns, and byilde faste vertues, as thei fou3ten with oon[v] hond a3ens enemyes, and biyldeden with the tothir[w] hond; and we schulden be ful bisy to kepe the gostely sabot in goode werkis and herying of God, sithen thei were so besy to kepe the figuratif sabot. [x]Thou3[y] the book of Tobie is[z] 'not of bileeue, it is[a] ful[b] deuout storie, and profitable to the symple puple, to maken hem to[c] kepe patience and Goddis heestis, to do werkis[d] of mercy, and teche[e] wel hire children, and to take wyues in the drede of God, for loue of children, and not al for foul lust off body, neither[f] for coueitise[g] of 'goodis of[gg] this[h] world; and also children moun lerne heere[i] bi ȝunge Tobie to be meke and obedient, and redy to serue fadir and modir in her nede. Therfore amonge alle the bookis of the elde testament symple men of wit schulden rede and here ofte this book of Tobie, to be trewe to God in prosperite and aduersite, and eschewe idolatrie, glotenye[k] and coueitise, and to be pacient in tribulacoun, and go neuere awey fro the[l] dreede and loue of God. [m]Thou3 the[n] seene of clerkis, either[o] general gadering of clergie, hath take the book of Judith among the noumbre of hooly scripturis, natheles it is not of the canoun eithir feith of the bible[p] anentis Ebreis, for thei resseyuen not the autoritie of this book; natheles it was writen in Caldee langage, and is[q] noumbrid among stories, as Jerom witnessith on the prolog. But natheles this book comendith[r] chastite and[s] abstinence, penaunce[t] and wideuhood of Judith, and her loue which sche hadde to deliuere[u] Goddis puple fro her enemyes, and to kepe the feith and[v] worschiping of God among his peple. Also this book comendith the feith and treuthe of Achior, that was conuertid to Goddis lawe bi myracle of[w] sleeing of[x] Olofernes, bi the hondis of the widewe Judith. Thanne Judith repreuede prestis for thei temtide God, and consentiden to deliuere[u] the citee to enemyes, if God sente not helpe to hem withinne v. daies, and goode prestis tooken meekly this repreuyng of a womman; and sche tau3te hem hou thei schulden do penaunce for this trespas, and coumforte[y] the puple to[yy] triste in God, and abyde his mercy and help, at his owne wille. Vs nedith not to excuse Judith fro lesingis and tresoun to Olofernes, but we moun fauorably excuse hire fro deedly synne in this doinge, for the greet loue that sche hadde to Goddis peple, and to slee Olofernes, a blasfemyere of God, and distroiere[z] of his lawe and peple; and iustly God took this[a] veniaunce on Olofernes, for his synnes and harmes don to Goddis peple, and whiche he purposide to[b] do, if he my3te lyue longe. Of this proces proude werriouris schulden drede God, that made proud Olofernes to be slayn of a womman, and al his greet oost 'to be[c] scaterid and distroied; and cristen men schulden be coumfortid greetly, for to haue ful trist in[d] God, and in his helpe, that so my3tily delyuerede his puple fro so greet an enemy and strong oost, withouten perisching of his peple. And sithen Judith hadde so greet[e] preising for hire doinge, that was medelid with manye synnes, myche more preising schulen thei haue in heuene, withouten ende, that putten forth hem silf to be martirid for Goddis cause, with trewe meenes of pacience and of charite. [f]The book of Ester tellith first[ff], how the[g] qwene Vasti was forsaken for hire pride, and was departid fro mariage[h] of king Assuerus, and hou Ester, for hire meekenesse, bewte, and Goddis grace was maad qwene in the stide of Vasty. Also the trewe Mardoche, the fadir in lawe of adopcioun of this womman Ester, tau3te hire to loue God, and kepe his lawe, and sche was full meke and obedient to Mardochee, 3he, whanne sche was qwene, as to hire fadir in lawe. Thanne Aaman, of the kinrede of Agag, conspyride bi sotil malice to distroie al the peple of Jewis, in the lond of Assuerus[i], and hadde graunt of the king, at his owne wille, and the day of distroiyng and of sleeing of the[k] Jewis was pupplischid thour3 al the rewme. Thanne Mardochee and the Jewis diden greet penaunce, and maden gret sorwe, and preieden God to[l] helpe in that gret nede. And Mardochee sente to Ester, that sche schulde do the same, and goo to the king, in perel of hire lijf, to axe grace of him, and reuoking of[m] lettris and power grauntid to Aman, the enemy of Jewis. And aftir myche fasting, penaunce, and preier, Estir bitook hirself to Goddis disposicioun, and to perel of her deth, and entride to the king, 3he, a3ens the lawe of the lond, whanne sche was not clepid, to axe mercy and help of the king, for hirsilf and al hire puple. And God turnede the feersnesse and cruelte[n] of the king to mekenesse, mersy, and benyngnite a3ens Ester, and the peple of Jewis. And thanne he reuokide the power grauntid to Aaman, and leet hange him, as he purposide[o] to haue hangid the trewe Mardochee, and 3af general power to Jewis to slee alle hire enemyes in his empire. Aftir these thingis the king enhaunside Mardochee, and made him grettist next the king, and 3af greet fraunchise and onour to the Jewis. This story of Ester schulde stire men to be trewe to God and his[p] lawe, and putte awey pride and enuye, and euere triste in God in alle perrels; and tirauntis schulden be aferd to conspire a3ens Goddis seruauntis, leest God take veniaunce on hem, as he dide on this man[q] Aaman, that conspiride[r] the deeth and general distroiyng of Jewis. [s]The book of Job is ful sotil in vndirstonding, for Job argueth a3ens hise[t] enemyes, that wolden bringe hym out of cristen feith, and concludith many errouris that suen of[u] hire false bileeue and opynyon; and Job affermith not that al is soth that he spekith a3ens hise aduersaries, but concludith hem in hire fals bileeue, that many errouris suen therof; and for I haue declarid in party in the glos hou the harde sentensis[v] of Job schulen be vndirstonden, therfore I passe ouer li3tly now. First this book tellith the kyn of Job, and hise[w] richessis, and holy lijf of him and hise[x] children; and[y] aftirward it tellith what tribulacoun bifelde to Joob in his catel, in hise children, and in his owne bodi, and hou paciently he suffride this, and thankide God in alle hise dissesis[z]. Thanne his wijf, whom the deuel reseruede as a special instrument to him, to disseyue Joob by his wijf, as he disseyuede Adam bi Eue, counceld him to blasfeme God, and therbi di3e; and Joob repreuede hire foly, and seide, if we han resseyued goodis of Goddis hond, whi suffre we not yuels, that is, peynes. In[a] alle these thingis Joob synnede not in hise lippis. Thanne sueth the disputing bitwixe Joob and hise freendis, almest til to the ende of the book. Job heeld strongly the treuthe of cristen[b] feith, and specialy of the rising a3en of bodies at domis day; and hise freendis seiden many treuthis, and medleden falsnesse, and euere purposiden an yuel ende and falsed, for thei helden that meede is 3ouen oonly in this lijf for goode werkis, and that no man is punyschid here, no but for synnes passid, and as a[c] man is punyschid more than an other in this lijf, so he hath synned more than another man lesse punschid; but al this is fals, as Joob preuith, and God confermith in the ende. For whi reward of goode deedis is myche more in the lijf to comynge, thanne in present lijf, and a vertuose man is punyschid here for to haue mede in heuene; and comunly a iust man hath more tribulacoun in this lijf thanne a wickid man, as it is opin of Crist, that suffride heere myche[d] dissese, and[e] of tyrauntis that han prosperite[f] in this lijf. And therfore Joob telde[g] opinly hise goode dedis to coumforte him[h] a3ens dispeir, to whiche hise frendis wolden bringe him; but Joob dide this ouer myche, and with sum pride, and iustifiede himself ouer myche, that hise freendis conseyueden that he blasfemyde God, and preuede God vnri3tful; and of thes twey poyntis Joob repentide in the ende. Thanne God for3af to him this litil synne, and appreued his trewe sentense, and dampnede the errour of hise aduersaries. Thanne Job preiede, and made sacrifice for hise aduersaries, and God herde him, and dide mercy to hem; and God addide alle thingis double, that Joob hadde; and he hadde xiiij. thousind of[i] scheep, and[j] vj. thousind of camelis, and a thousind 3ockis of oxen, and a thousind femal[jj] assis, and vij. sones, and iij. dou3tris; and Joob lyuede `vij. score[k] 3eer aftir his turment, and si3 hise sones and the sones of his sones til to[kk] the fourthe generacoun. This proces of Job schulde stire men to be iust of lyuyng, and to be pacient in aduersitees, as Joob was, and to be stedfast in cristen feith, and answere wijsely and meekly to eretikis and aduersaries of oure feith, as Petir and Poul techen, and euere be meke and ful of charite, and preie for oure enemyes, and looke[l] aftir meede in heuene, and not in erthe, for oure good deedis[m]. The Sautir* comprehendith al the elde and newe testament, and techith pleynly the mysteries of the Trinite, and of Cristis incarnacoun, passioun, rising a3en, stying[n] in to heuene, and sending doun of the Holy Gost, and preching of the gospel, and the[o] coming of Antecrist, and the general

* Whanne it is knowen alle the profetis to haue spoken bi reuelacioun of the Hooli Goost, it is knowen Dauith, moost of profetis, to haue spoken sumwise in worthier and ouerpassynge maner thanne other profetis, as the trumpe of the Hooli Goost. Forsothe other profetis proficieden bi sum maner ymagis of thingis and withinne coueryngis of wordis, that is, bi sweuenis, and visiouns, and sawis, and dedis; forsothe Dauith made out his profecie thoru3 stirynge of the Holi Goost aloone withouten vttermore help. Wherfore couenabli this book is seid the book of solitarie spechis; it is also seid a sauter, the whiche it tooke of a musik instrument that Ebreuli is clepid noblun; Greekly a sauter of this Greek word psallym, that is, touchynge; Latynly it is seid an orgoun that is of ten coordis, and fro the ouer part 3eueth soun bi the touch of hondis. Forsothe of that instrument at the lettre therfore it is nemned this dom of Crist, and the glorie of chosen[p] men to blisse, and the peynes of hem that schulen be dampned in helle; and ofte rehersith the stories of the elde testament, and bringith in the keping of Goddis heestis, and loue of enemyes. Noo book in the eld testament is hardere to vndirstonding[q] to vs Latyns, for oure lettre discordith myche fro the Ebreu, and many doctouris taken litel heede to the lettre, but al to the[r] goostly vndirstonding. Wel book, for at the vois of that instrument Dauith songe psalmes bifore the arke in the tabernacle of the Lord, and as alle the swete songis of that instrument weren clepid psalmes, so and alle the particlis or clausis of this book. Also aftir the spiritual vndirstondynge it takith wel name of that instrument; for as that instrument is of ten coordis, so this book techith thee al aboute the kepinge of the ten heestis; and as that instrument ȝeueth soun fro the ouer part bi the touche of hondis, so this book techith welle to worche, not for erthely thingis, but for heuenly thingis that ben abouen. This book stoondith in an hundrid and fifti psalmes, not biside the resoun of hiȝere signyfiynge. Forsothe this noumbre is notid to moost solempne mysteries; it stondith forsothe of eiȝti and seuenti; and eiȝte aloone signyfieth the same that eiȝti dooth, and seuenti the same that seuene dooth. Eiȝte forsothe signyfieth the eiȝtithe age of aȝenrisynge; for sithen ther ben sixe agis of men lyuynge, and the seuenthe of men diynge, the eiȝte age schal be of men aȝen risynge. Bi seuene forsothe is bitokened the tyme of this lif, that is passid bi the ofte sithes comynge of seuen daies. Riȝtly thanne this book is maad in siche a noumbre of psalmes, whos parties signyfien the biforseid mysteries; for it techith so vs in the seuenthe age of this lif to worche and to lyue, that in the eiȝthe age of aȝenrisynge we ben not clothid with the double foold cloth of confucioun, but with the stoole of double glorifiynge. Or therfor it is maad in that noumbre of psalmes, for, as we han seid, this noumbre stoondith of eiȝti and seuenti, that aloone bitokenen the same that eiȝte and seuene doth. Forsothe eiȝti bitokeneth the newe testament; forsothe the fadris of the newe testament toke to o day, that is, disseruen to eiȝti; thei kepen forsothe the eiȝte day of the resurreccioun of Crist, that is, the sunday, and the vtas of seintis, and abiden the eiȝte of aȝenrisynge. Bi seuene is bitokened the olde testament therfore, for the fadris of the olde testament serueden to ebroady, that is, to seuene; forsothe thei kepten the seuenthe day, and the seuenthe woke, the seuenthe moonthe, the seuenthe ȝeer, and the seuenthe ȝeer of the seuenthe, that is, the fiftithe, that is seid iubile. Wherfor Salamon seith, ȝeue parties seuene and also eiȝte. And as myche as we schulen rere vp to hym seuene scheepherdis and eiȝte primatis, therfor this book is wel maad in that noumbre of psalmes, whos parties bitokenen the doctryne of euer either testament, that bi that he schewide the heestis of either testament to be conteened in this book. This book forsothe is dyuydid bi thre fifties, bi which the thre staatis of cristen religioun ben bitokened; of which the firste is in penaunce, the secunde in riȝtfulnes, the thridde in preisynge of euer lastynge lif. Wherfore the firste fifty is endid in penaunce, that is, the salm that biginneth thus, "Haue merci of me, God;" the secunde in riȝtfulnes, that is, this salm, "Merci and doom I schal "syng to thee;" the thridde in preisyng of euer lastynge lif, that is, the word, "Eeh spirit preise the Lord." And for Dauith techith these thre thingis in this book, this threfoold distincciouu of salmes is maad. Also it is to be notid this scripture to be ofte vsid in the chirche seruyse more than other; that therfore is doon, for in this book is the ful endynge of the hooli book of Goddis word. Forsothe here ben discryued the meedis of good men, the tourmentis of yuel men, the playn techinge of biginnynge men, the forth goynge of profitynge men, the persecucioun of ful kunnynge men, the lif of actijf men, and the spiritual biholdynge of contemplatijf men; here also is tauȝt, what doht awei synne, what penaunce restorith, what the gilti of synne forthenkynge seith, that is, "Lord, in thi woodnes vndernyme thou not "me," and in another place, "Haue merci of me, God, aftir thi myehil merci;" and what ben purchasid bi penaunce, whanne he vndirioyneth, "I schal teche wickide men thi weies, and vnpitous men schulen be "conuerted to thee," bi which is schewid, that no man taken to the mekenesse of forthinkynge mystriste of forȝeuenes and of merci of God, hou myche euere be his trespas. Whanne forsothe we biholden Dauith a mansleer and avouterer, maad bi penaunce a doctour and a profete, place of wanhope is left to no man doynge penaunce; as [bi] the conuertinge of Poul and his anaunsynge in to apostle we ben plenly certified of the merci of God. Wherefore the chirche vsith in office, as the profecie of Dauith, the pistle of him more thanne other. And therfore this profecie is hadde ofter in vsse, for amonge othere profecies it passith in openyng of sawis. Forsothe tho thingis that other profetis seiden derkly, and as bi figure, of the passioun and the resurreccioun of Crist, and of euerlastynge getynge, and of other mysteries, Dauith, moost excellent of profetis, openyde so enydently, that he be seen more to euangelisen thanne to profecien.

were him that koude wel vndirstonde the Sautir, and kepe it in his lyuyng, and seie it deuoutly, and conuicte Jewis therbi; for manye men[s] that seyn it vndeuoutly, and lyuen out of charite, lyen foule on hemself to God, and blasfemen hym, whanne thei crien it ful loude to mennis eeris in the chirche. Therfore God ȝeue grace to vs to lyue wel in charite, Dauith, the sone of Gesse, whanne he was in his rewme, he chees foure, that schulden make salmes, that is, Asaph, Eman, Ethan, and Edithym. Forsothe the eiȝti and eiȝte seiden the salmes, and ij. hundrid the vndirsyngynge; and Abyuth* smoot the harpe. Whanne Dauith, smoot the harpe, hadde brouȝt aȝen the arke aȝen clepid fro Azotis in to Jerusalem, aftir twenti ȝeer and† abood in the hous of Amynadab, this he putte on in a new ȝockid carte, and brouȝten in to Jerusalem men chosen of alle the kynrede of the sones of Israel seuenti thousand, of the lynage of Leuy forsothe two hundrid `seuenti and eiȝte thousand‡ men; of which he ordeynede foure princis to be biforn to the songis, Asaph, Eman, Ethan and Edithym, dyuydynge to ech of hem two and seuenti men vndercriynge preisynge of the songis to the Lord. And oon forsothe of hem smoot the symbal, another the harpe, another enhaunsing the hornen trumpe; forsothe Dauith him silf stood in the myddil of hem holdynge a sautre. And sotheli thei wenten bifore the arke in seuene queeris, and the sacrifice was a calf; forsothe al the peple folowide aftir the arke. Thanne alle the psalmes of Dauith ben in noumbre an hundrid and fifti, of the whieh al forsothe Dauith him silf maad nyne; two and thritti han not superscripcioun; fifti and two and twenti in to Dauith; twelue in to Asaph; twelue in to Ydithim; nyne to the sones of Chore; oon to Moises; two in to Salamon; two in to Aggie and Zacharie; and so alle the psalmes of Dauith ben maad in noumbre of an hundrid and fifti. The dyuysiouns of psalmes that ben clepid deapsalmes ben in the noumbre of seuenti and fyue; the canticlis of grece ben in noumbre of fiftene. The firste psalme to no man is asigned, for it is of alle, therfore what other man is vndirstonden in the firste but the firste geten, that inscripcioun worthili schuld not be necessarie. Ferthermore for that psalme makith mencioun of Crist, as aȝen Crist expownynge the persoone transcriued, vttirli thei han not withinne chaungid the ordre of storie. We reden in the titlis of psalmes, but the psalmes not aftir the storie but ben rede aftir the profecie, so the ordre of titlis may not disturble the ordre of psalmes. And alle the psalmes that ben inscryued to him Dauith, perteynen to the sacrament of Crist, for Dauith is seid Crist.

This book comprehendith al the eeld and newe testament, and techith pleynli the mysteries of the Trinite, and of Cristis incarnacioun, passioun, risynge aȝen, and stiynge in to heuene, and sendynge doone of the Holi Goost, and prechinge of the gospel, and the comynge of Antecrist, and the general doom of Crist, and the glorie of chosen men to blisse, and the peynes of hem that schulen be dampned in helle; and ofte rehersith the stories of the olde testament, and bringgith in the kepinge of Goddis heestis, and loue of enemyes.

Greet aboundaunce of goostli comfort and ioie in God cometh in the hertis of hem, that seien or syngen deuoutly these psalmes in preisynge of Jhesus Crist; thei droppen swetnes in mannes soule, and holden delite in her thouȝtis, and tenden her willis with the fier of loue, makynge hem hoot in charite, and brennynge withinne of loue, and faire and semeli to Cristis yȝen. And these that lasten in deuocioun, thoru the psalmes thei may be reisid in to contemplatif lif, and myrthe of heuene. The songe of psalmes putteth awei feendis, excitith aungels to oure help, it doth awei synne, it quemeth God, it enformeth partfitnesse, it doth awei and distrieth alle noies and angris of the soule, it bringith to man desiris of heuene, and dispit of ertheli thingis. Sotheli this schynynge book, seid of hem deuoutly that ben in clene lijf, is a chosun songe bifore God, as a laumpe liȝtnynge oure lif, hele of a sik herte that coueitith to be helid, hony to a bittir soule that langwischith in verey penaunce, dignyte of goostli persoones, tunge of pryuy vertues, the which ledith the proud to mekenes, and kingis to pore men it makith vndirloutynge; it ledith the enuious to partfiȝt loue, the wrathful to pacience and suffraunce, the coueitous and the auarous to largenes for heuenli reward, the slouthful to deuocioun and bisi traueile for desijr of heuenli ioie, the glotoun to abstynence and mesure of mete and drink, the lecherous to chastite and clene leuynge, nurischinge children with holynes. In these psalmes is myche fairnes of vndirstondinge of medycynal wordis, that this book is clepid gardyne enclosid, wel enceeled, paradis ful of alle good applis. Now it is with holsum lore and techinge of vertues thoru out ful sett, troublid and stonied soulis it bryngith to cleer and peesful lif; now amonestynge to fordo synnes with teeris of iȝen wepinge, and sorewe of hert of forthenkynge; now bihotinge to riȝtwise men ioie; now manassinge helle peyne to wickid men. in God; for it kyndelith therinne deuout deuocioun of aungels song, whom we may not here slepinge in synne; and he that hath not delite in seiynge of these psalmes may suppose that he is an alien fro verrey lif. O wondirful swetnes! the which wexith not sour thoru3 the corrupcioun of this wrecchid world, but euermore lastinge and wexynge in grace. Alle gladnes and delite of this erthely vanyte vanyschith, and at the last worthith to nou3t, but the lenger tyme this swetnes lastith, the more it wexith, and althir moost a3enst good mennes diynge, whanne loue of Crist is moost parfi3t. This book is clepid the sauter, the which name it hath of an instrument of mysik, that in Ebreu is clepid noblum, in Greek sautrie, of psalme, that in Englisch is of tunge[a]; and it is of ten coordis, and 3eueth the soun fro ouere throu3 touchinge of hond. Also this book techith to kepe the x. comaundementis, and to worche, not for ertheli thingis, but oneli for heuenli ioie that is aboue, and so 3euen soun fro heuene where oure loue schuld be, at the touchinge of oure hond, that is, in trewe worchinge aftir Cristis biddynge, whanne alle that we don, we do it for Cristis loue. Also this book is departid in thries fifti psalmes, in the which the thre statis of cristen mennes religioun ben signyfied; the firste in verey penaunce, that other in ri3tfulnes, the thridde in preisinge of endeles lif. The firste fifti ben endid in Miserere mei, Deus; the tother in Misericordiam et iudicium; the thridde in Omnis spiritus laudet Dominum. This book of alle holy writt is moost vsid in hooli chirche seruice, for cause that in it is perfectioun or duuyne pagyne, for it conteyneth schortly that that other bookis drawen longly, that is to seie, of the old testament and of the newe. Therinne ben diseryued the meedis of good men, the peynes of yuel men, the techinge of verey penaunce, the wexinge in ri3twise lif of actif trewe men, the which passen to heuene, the perfectioun of holi men, the meditacioun of hem that ben contemplatif, and the greet ioie of contemplacioun, the hi3est that may be in man leuynge in bodi and felynge. Also this book schewith what synne takith fro a mannes soule, and what penaunce restorith, it is no need to telle echoon here, for thoron Goddis grace thei schulen be open inow withinne in the book. This scripture is clepid book of ympnes of Crist; ympne is preisinge of God with devowte preiynge. To an ympne fallen thre thingis, preisinge of God, ioiynge of hertly thou3t, enteerli thenkynge of Goddis loue. Deuoute preier is a greet gladnes of mannes thou3t of lastinge thing in endeles ioie, berstynge out in vois of preisinge. It is wel clepid book of ympnes, for it techith vs to loue God with glade chere, and makynge myrthe, thorou softynge oure soule thoru hope, not oonli in hert but also with vois plesynge Crist, and techinge hem that ben vnkunnynge. The mater of this book is Crist and his spouse, that is, holi chirche, or ech ri3twise mannes soule; the entent is to conferme men, that ben defoulid with synne of old Adam, to cristen mennes lif thoru3 grace of newe Adam, that is, Jhesus Crist. The mater of this boke or this lore is sich, that sumtyme it spekith of Crist in his godheed, sumtyme in his manheed, in that that he vsith the vois of his seruauntis. Also of hooly chirche he spekith in thre maneris, sumtyme in the persoone of cristen men, sumtyme of yuel men, sumtyme of cursid men, the which ben in holi chirche bi bodi not bi clene thou3t, bi name not bi good dede, in noumbre not bi merite. In this werk I seke no straunge Englische, but that that is esiest and moost comyn, and sich that is moost like to the Latyn, so that thei that knowen not the Latyn, bi the Englisch may come to many Latyn wordis. In the translacioun I folowe the lettre as myche as I may, and ther I fynd no propre Englisch, I folowe the witt of the wordis, so that thei that schulen rede it, dar not drede errynge. *MS. Trin. and comenden[g] myche iust lordis and sogetis, and[h] repreuen[i] strongly wrongful lordis and rebel sogettis. Also Prouerbis techen derkly the mysteries[k] of Crist, and of hooly chirche, and techen[l] myche wijsdom and prudence, for the soule and the[m] body. Therfore lordis, and[n] 'iugis, and[o] comuneris also, and namely prestis, schulden stodie wel this book, and rule hemself therbi, to saluacoun of body and of[p] soule. [q]Ecclesiastes is a ful sotil book, for Salamon spekith in many persones, and concludith her entent and sentence, not in appreuyng the sentence of fleschly men, that preisen more bodily goodis and lustis of the body than heuenly goodis and lyking of vertues, and dampneth many errours of worldly men, and schewith that al is vanite, til me come to the drede of God, and keeping of hise heestis. Therfore men 'moten bee wel[r] war hou thei vndirstonden Salamon in this[s] book, that thei appreue noon errour, and dampne noo treuthe, for mysconseyuing of Salamonys wordis, and the Hooly Goostis wordis in this book. [t]The Songis[u] of Songis touchen[w] derkly the staat of the synagoge, fro the gooing out of Egipt til to Cristis incarnacoun and passioun; and thanne tho[x] Songis touchen the staat of Cristis chirche, and 'of the[y] synagoge in the ende of the world, and treetyn hiȝly of loue[z] to[a] God and neiȝebore also; and this book is so sotil to vndirstonde, that Jewis ordeyneden, that no man schulde stodie it, no but he were of xxx. ȝeer, and hadde able wit to vndirstonde the goostly preuytees of this book; for sum of the[b] book seemith to fleschly men to sounne[c] vnclene loue of leccherie, where it tellith hiȝ goostly loue, and greet preuytees of Crist and of his chirche. Therfore men moten be ful[d] wel war to conseyue wel[e] the wordis of the Holy Goost in this book, and knowe whanne Crist spekith to the chirche, either[f] to the synagoge, and whanne the synagoge spekith to God, and whanne the chirche spekith to Crist, and whanne God spekith to aungels, patriarkis, and prophetis, and apostlis, and whanne these persones speken to the synagoge either[f] to the chirche, either[f] aȝenward. [g]The book of Wijsedom, 'thouȝ it be not a book of bileeue[h], techith[i] myche riȝtfulnesse, and preisith wysdom, and repreuith fleschly men for hire false bileeue and yuel lyuynge, and comendith myche iust men, sad[j] in bileeue and vertuouse lyuynge, and touchith[k] myche of Cristis incarnacoun, his manheed and godheed togidere, and dampneth gretly idolatrie, and fals worschiping of idolis, and false goddis. [l]'Thouȝ Ecclesiastici be no[m] book of bileeue, it[n] techith myche wisdom and prudence 'for soule and body, and hath myche the sentence[o] of Prouerbis, and comaundith men to thenke and speke of Goddis heestis[p], and for[q] to dreede God, and loue him, and euere haue mynde of deth, and of[r] the greet dom, to kepe men out of synne, and in parfit loue to God and man. Also it preisith myche almes and good preier, and repreuith gretly extorcouns, and wrong[s], and false oothis, and false mesuris, and false weyȝtis, and al fraude, preuy and apert; at the laste it comendith goode men, and herieth God, that delyuereth fro alle perrelis. If this book be wel vndirstonden, it is profitable bothe to goostly gouernours and bodily lordis, and iustisis[t] and comyns also. [u]The Prophetis han a general prologe for alle, and for I declaride sumdel the grete profetis, and in party the litil[v] prophetis, and[w] thenke soone to make an ende, with Goddis help, of the glos on[x] the smale prophetis, I thenke now to passe ouer withouten eny tarying. [y]The firste book of Macabeis tellith hou gret distruccioun and cruelte Antioke the noble[z] dide aȝens the Jewis, and hou many thousindis he killide of hem, that wolden holde Goddis lawe, and brente the bookis of Goddis lawe, and defoulide the temple of Jerusalem, and compellide men, for drede of deth,

CAP. XII.

But it is to wite, that holy scripture hath iiij. vndirstondingis; literal, allegorik, moral, and anagogik. The literal vndirstonding techith the thing don in deede; and literal vndirstonding is ground and foundament of thre[v] goostly vndirstondingis, in[w] so myche as Austyn, in his pistle to Vincent, and othere doctouris seyn, oonly bi the literal vndirstonding a man may argue aȝens an aduersarie. Allegorik is a goostly vndirstonding, that techith what thing[x] men owen for[y] to bileeue of Crist either[z] of hooly chirche. Moral is a goostly vndirstonding, that techith men, what vertues thei owen to sue, and what vices thei owen to flee. Anagogik is a goostly vndirstonding, that techith men, what blisse thei[a] schal[b] haue in heuene. And these foure vndirstondingis moun be taken in this word Jerusalem; for whi to the[c] literal vndirstonding it singnefieth an erthly citee, as Loundoun, either[d] such another; to allegorie it singnefieth hooly chirche in erthe, that fiȝtith aȝens synnes and fendis; to[e] moral vndirstondinge it singnefieth a cristen soule; to anagogik it singnefieth hooly chirche regnynge in blisse either[f] in[g] heuene, and tho that ben therinne. And these thre goostly vndirstondingis ben not autentik either[h] of beleeue, 'no but[i] tho ben groundid opynly in the text of holy scripture, in oo place other[k] other[l], either in opin resoun that may not be distroied, either[m] whanne the gospelris either[m] other apostlis taken allegorie of the eelde testament, and confeermyn it, as Poul in the pistle to Galat. in[n] iiij.[o] c[o]. preueth, that Sara, the free wijf and principal of Abraham, with Isaac hir sone, singnefieth bi allegorie the newe testament and the sones of biheeste; and Agar, the hand mayde, with hir sone Ismael, signefieth bi allegorie the elde testament, and fleschly men that schulen not be resseyued in to the eritage of God with the sones of biheeste, that holden the[p] treuthe and freedom of Cristis gospel with endeles charite. many figuratif spechis, and as Austyn[q] seith in the iij. book of Cristen Teching, that autouris of hooly scripture vsiden moo figuris, that is, mo fyguratif spechis, than gramariens moun gesse, that reden not tho[r] figuris in holy scripture. It is to be war in the bigynnyng, that we take not to the lettre a figuratif speche, for thanne, as Poul seith, the lettre sleeth, but the spirit, that is, goostly vndirstonding, qwykeneth; for whanne a thing which is seid figuratifly is taken so as if it be[s] seid propirly, 'me vndirstondith[t] fleschly; and noon is clepid more couenably the deth of soule, than[u] whanne vndirstonding, that passith beestis, is maad soget to the fleisch in suynge the lettre. What euer thing in Goddis word may not be referrid propirly to oneste of vertues neither[v] to the treuthe of feith, it[w] is figuratyf speche. Onestee of vertues perteyneth to loue[x] God[y] and the[z] neiȝebore; treuthe of feith perteyneth to knowe God and the[a] neiȝebore. Hooly scripture[b] comaundith no thing no[c] but charite, it[d] blamith no thing no[e] but coueitise; and in that manere it enfoormeth the vertues either[f] goode[g] condiscouns of men. Holy scripture affermith no thing no[h] but cristen feith bi thingis passid, present, and to comynge, and[i] alle these thingis perteynen to nursche charite, and make it strong, and to ouercome and quenche coueitise. Also it is figuratijf speche, where[k] the wordis maken allegorie, ether[l] a derk lycnesse, either[l] parable[m], and it is fyguratyf[n] speche in i.° c̃. of Jeremye, "to day I have ordeyned thee on folkis[p] "and rewmys, that thou draw up bi the roote, and distroie, and bylde, and plaunte;" that is, that thou drawe out elde synnes, and distroie circumstaunces[q] either[r] causis of thoo, and bylde vertues, and plaunte goode werkis and customys. Alle thingis in holy scripture, that seemyn to vnwijse men to be ful of wickidnesse aȝens a man himself, either[r] aȝens his neiȝebore, ben figuratyf spechis, and the preuytees, either[r] goostly vndirstondinges, schulden be souȝt out of vs, to the feeding either[r] keping of charite. Such[s] a reule schal be kept in figuratif spechis, that so longe it be turned in mynde bi diligent consideracoun, til the expownyng either[t] vndirstonding[u] be brouȝt to the rewme of charite; if[v] eny speche of scripture sounneth propirly charite, it owith not to be gessid a figuratijf speche; and forbeedith[w] wickidnesse, either[x] comaundith profyt either[x] good doynge, it is no figuratyf speche; if it seemith[y] to comaunde cruelte, either[z] wickidnesse, either[z] to forbede prophit,

'Here bigynneth a prolog upon the gospel of Mathew[a].

Seynt Austyn seith, in the secunde book of Cristen Doctrine, in the ende, what euer thing eny man fyndith in eny science out of holy writ, if the thing founden is veyn, it is dampned in holi writ; and whanne the thing founden is profitable, it is founden in holi writ. And whanne eny man schal fynde alle thingis in holi writ, whiche he leerned profitabli in eny other sciencis, miche plenteuouslier he schal fynde there tho thingis profitable, that ben not lerned in eny maner othere sciencis, not but oonli in the wondirful hiȝnes and wondirful mekenesse of holi scriptures. Also in the thridde book of Cristen Doctrine Austyn seith thus, "Be thou ware, that thou take not figuratyf speche to the lettre, for herto per- "teyneth the Apostlis word, seiyng, 'the lettre sleeth, truli the Spirit,' that is, goostli vndirstondyng, "'makith it[b] to lyue;' for whanne thing seid bi figure is taken as seid propirli to the lettre, it is vndir- "stonden fleischli; no deth of soule is seid more couenabli, than whanne vndirstondyng, that is excellent "in the soule thanne beestis, is suget to the fleisch in suyng the lettre, that is, turnyng to fleischli lustis." Also a propir speche in holi writ schal not be taken as figuratijf; what euer thing in Goddis word, that is, holi writ, may not be referrid propirli to honest thingis or vertues, neither to the truthe of feith, knowe thou that hou[c] it is figuratijf speche. Honest of thewis parteyneth to[d] loue God and thi neiȝbore; truthe of feith parteyneth to knowe God and thi neiȝbore. Truli to ech man is his hope, and his owne con-either[a] good doinge, it is a figuratijf speche. Crist seith, "if ȝe eten not the flesch of "mannis sone and drinke not his blood, ȝe schulen not have lijf in ȝou." This speche semith to comaunde wickidnesse either[a] cruelte, therfore it is a figuratif speche, and comaundith men to comune with Cristis passioun, and to kepe in mynde sweetly and profitably, that Cristis flesch was woundid and crucified for vs. Also whanne hooly scripture seith, "if thin enemy hungrith, feede thou hym, if he thurstith, ȝeue thou drinke to hym," it comaundith benefice, either[a] good doinge; whanne it seith, "thou schalt gadere togidere "coolis on his heed," it seemith that wickidnesse of yuel wille is comaundid. This is seid bi figuratijf speche, that thou vndirstonde, that the coolys of fijer ben brennynge weylyngis, either[a] moornyngis of penaunce, bi whiche the pride of hym is mad hool, which sorwith, that he was enemy of a[b] man that helpith and releuith[c] his wrecchidnesse[d]. Also the same word either[e] the same thing in scripture is taken sumtyme in good, and sumtyme in yuel, as a lyoun singnefieth sumtyme Crist, and in another place it singnefieth the deuyl. Also sour douȝ is set sumtyme in yuel, where Crist seith, "be ȝe war of the[f] sour douȝ of Fari-"sees, which is ypocrisie;" sour douȝ is sett also in good, whanne Crist seith, "the rewme "of heuenes is lyk sour douȝ," etc. And whanne not oo thing aloone but tweyne, either[g] mo, ben feelid, either[g] vndirstonden, bi the same wordis of scripture, thouȝ that it[h] is[i] hid, that he vndirstond[k] that[l] wroot, it is[m] no perel, if it may be preuyd bi other placis[n] of hooly scripture[o], that ech of tho thingis acordith with treuthe. And in hap the autour of scripture seith thilk[p] sentense in the same wordis which we[q] wolen vndirstonde; and certys the Spirit of God, that wrouȝte these thingis bi the autour of scripture, bifore siȝ withoute doute, that thilke[r] sentense schulde come to the redere, either[s] to the herere, ȝhe, the Holy Goost purueyde, that thilke sentence, for it is groundid on trewthe, schulde come to the redere, either[s] to the herere, for whi[t] what myȝte be purueyed of God largiliere and plentyuousliere in Goddis spechis, than that the same wordis be vndirstonden in manye maners, whiche maners, either[u] wordis of God, that ben not of lesse autorite, maken[v] to be preued. Austin Austyn. in iij.[w] book of Cristen Teching seith al this and myche more, in the bigynnyng therof. Also he whos herte is ful of charite conprehendith, withouten eny errour, the manyfoold abundaunce and largest teching of Goddis scripturis[x], for whi Poul seith, "the fulnesse of "lawe is charite," and in another place, "the ende of lawe[y]," that is, the[z] perfeccioun, either[a] science, as he feelith him silf to profite to the knowyng and louyng of God, and of thi neiȝbore. Holi writ comaundith no thing but charite, neither blameth eny thing no but coueitise; and bi this maner holi writ enformeth the condicions of men. Holi writ affermeth not no but general feith bi thingis passid, present, and to comyng; bifore tellyng of thingis to comyng, schewyng is of thingis present; but alle these thingis parteynen for to norische the same charite, and to strenkthe it, and to ouercome and quenche coueitise. Also figuratijf speche is, where euer the wordis maken allegorie, that is goostli vndirstondyng parteynyng to feith, or whanne wordis maken derkenes or parable. In al figuratijf speche such a rule schal be kept, that so long that that is red be ofte turned bi diligent consideracioun or studie, til interpreting or expownyng be brouȝt to the rewme of charite, truli if it now sowneth propirli charite, it is no figuratijf speche. If the speche is comaunding, forbeding either corrupcion of soule or resoun, either forbeding trespas aȝens neiȝbore, either comaundyng profiȝt, either good doyng, it is not figuratijf speche, but propre to the lettre; forsothe if the speche of holi writ seme to comaunde peruersion of soule, or trespas aȝens neiȝbore, either to forbede profiȝt, either good doyng, it is figuratijf speche. Crist seith, "no but ȝe schullen ete the fleisch of mannes sone, and schulen drinke his blood, ȝe schulen not have lijf "in ȝou;" it semeth to comaunde trespas[e] or noiyng of neiȝbore, either peruertyng of soule; therfore it is figuratijf speche, comaunding us for to comyne to Cristis passion, and swetli and profitable to haue in filling[b], of the[c] lawe, "is charite of clene herte, and of good conscience, and of feith not "feyned," and Jhesu Crist seith, "thou schalt loue thi Lord God of al thin herte, and of al "thi soule, and of al thi mynde, and thi neiȝebore as thi self, for in these twey comaunde- "mentis hangith al the lawe and prophetis[d]." And as the roote of alle yuels is coueitise, so the roote of alle goodis is charitee. Charite, bi which we louen God and the neiȝebore, holdith sykirly al the greetnesse and largnesse[e] of Goddis spechis. Therefore if it is not leisir to seeke alle holy scriptures, to expounne alle the wlappingis[f] of wordis, to perse alle the preuytes of scripturis, holde thou charite, where[g] alle thingis hangen, so thou schalt holde that that thou[h] lernydist[i] there; also thou schalt holde that that thou lernedist not, for if thou knowist[k] charite, thou knowist sum thing wheronne also that hangith that in hap thou knowist not; and in that that thou vndirstondist in scripturis[l], charite is opin, and in that that thou vndirstondist not, charite is hid, therfore he that hooldith charite in vertues, either[m] in goode condiscouns, hooldith bothe that that is opyn and that that[n] is hid in Goddis wordis. Austyn seith al this and myche more in a sermoun of the preysing of charite. Also vij. reulis of Tyconye and of Austyn declaren many derke[o] thingis of hooly scripturis. The first reule is of Jhesu Crist, and of his holy spirit[p]; oo persoone of the heed and[q] of the body, that is, of Crist and of[r] holy chirche, is schewid to vs in this reule, for it is not seid in veyn to feithful men, "ȝee ben the seed of Abraham," whanne ther is oo seed of Abraham, which seed[s] is Crist[t]. Doute we not, whanne scripture goith fro the[u] hed to the body, either[v] fro the body to the heed, and natheles it goith not awey fro oon and the same persone, for whi oo persone spekith in Isaie, "he[w] settide a myter to me as "to[x] a spouse, and he onouride[y] me as a spousesse with an[z] ournement." And natheles it is to vndirstonde what of these tweyne acoordith[a] to the heed, that is, Crist, and what acordith to the body, that is, hooly chirche, for whi a myter acordith to Crist, which is the spouse, and an[b] ournement acordith to hooly chirche, which is the spouse[c] of Crist. The secunde reule, as Ticouye seith, is of the bodi of Crist, which bodi is departid into tweyne, but ceertis this bodi of Crist ouȝte not be[d] clepid so, for treuly it is not the bodi of Crist, which shal not be with him withouten ende, but it schal be seid of the veri bodi and of the medlid body of Crist, either[e] of the veri bodi and feyned[f] body of Crist; for whi ypocritis schulen be seid to be not with Crist, not oonly withouten ende, but also now, thouȝ thei seemyn to be in the chirche of Crist. Wherfor this reule myȝt be clepid thus, that it were seid of the medlid chirche, that[g] is, that conprehendith chosen men to blisse, and also ipocritis, that schulen be dampned. And this reule axith a waking either[h] diligent[i] redere; whanne it spekith of other men, it semith to speke now as to the same men to[j] whiche it spac bifore, either[k] it seemith to speke of[l] the same men, whanne it spekith of othere men; as if oo body be of euer either, for temporal medlyng, and for comynyng of sacramentis. To this reule it[m] perteyneth, that the chirche seith in Songis, "I am blac "and fair as the tabernaclis of Cedar, as[n] the skynnes of Salomon;" the chirche seide that sche is euer either, for temporal vnite withinne oo net of goode fischis and of yuel fischis[o]; for whi the tabernaclis of Cedar parteynen to Ismael, that schal not be eir with the sone of the free wijf. The thridde reule is of byheestis and of[p] lawe; this reule may be seid also of the spirit and lettre; it[q] may be seid also of grace and of comaundement; and Tyconie erride in seyinge, that werkis ben ȝouen of God to vs for meryt of feith, but feith it silf is so of vs, that it is not of God to vs. The iiij. reule is of al and of party, whanne summ of a thing is set for al, eithir[r] aȝenward al is set for a party. The v. reule is of tymes, and this is bi a figure clepid synodoches, whanne a[s] part is set for al, either[t] al is set for oo[u] part. Oon euangelist seith, that it was don aftir viij.[v] daies, whanne the face of Crist schynede as the sunne, and another gospeler seide[w], that it was don aftir vj. daies; euer either myȝte not be soth, that is seid of the noumbre of daies, no but he that seide aftir viij. daies be vndirstonden to haue sett for the hool day the last part of the day, sithen Crist bifore seide it to come, and to haue set for the hool day the first part of the day, in whiche[x] he schewith, that the appering of Cristis face was fully don; and[y] that he that seide aftir vj. daies, rekynede[yy] alle the hool daies and the myddil daies, and noon other. Bi this kynde of speche, bi which kinde al is singnefied by a part, thilk questioun of Cristis rising aȝen is asoiled; the laste part of the day, wherinne Crist suffride deth, is taken for al the day with the nyȝt passid bifore, and the first part of Sunday[z], in whos morewitide he roos aȝen, is taken for al Sunday[z] and the nyȝt bifore goynge; and the Sabot with the[a] hool nyȝt bifore goynge is al hool[b] day and nyȝt. If these nyȝtis and daies be not taken thus, ther moun not be iij. daies and iij. nyȝtis, in whiche he bifore seide, that he schulde be in the herte of erthe[c]. Also this reule of tymes is taken for lawful noumbris, as ben vij. x. and[d] xij. and suche moo, for ofte suche noumbris ben sett for al tyme, as this that Dauith seith, "seuen sithis in the day I seide preysing, either[e] herying, to thee," is noon[f] othir thing

"ournede me as a spouse with ournement;" And netheles it is to vndirstonde, whiche of these accordith to the heed, that is, Crist, and whiche to the bodi, that is, holi chirche. The secunde rule is of Cristis bodi, partide in tweye parties, as Tyconye seith, which truli ouȝt not be clepid so, for truli the ilke is not the bodi of the Lord, whiche schal not be in to withouten eende in blis, but it is to be seid of the veri bodi of the Lord and of the medlid bodi, or veri bodi and feyned; for not oonli withouten eende, but now also ypocritis schulen not be seid to be with the Lord withouten ende, thouȝ thei seme to be in his chirche. Therfore this rule myȝt be seid of the medlid chirche. This rule askith a wakyng redere, whanne holi writt spekith to othere men as to the same to which it spekith bifore, or whanne it semeth to speke of the same men, and netheles spekith of othere, as oo bodi be of hem boothe for temporal medling and comunyng of sacramentis. The thridde rule is of biheestis and lawe, which may be of spiritis and of lettre, or of grace and of maundementis. The fourthe rule is of spice and of kynde, that is of part and of al the hool thing, of the which[h] the part is. The fifthe reule is of tymes, that is bi figure synadochie, whanne al is vndirstonden bi part, or part vndirstonden bi al. In this maner Crist is seide to haue leie deed in the sepulcre thre daies and thre nyȝtis; the laste part of Good Friday is set for al the[i] day, and the firste part of Sunday, and the Satirday al ful. than this, "his herying be euere in my mouth." Also bi an c. and xliii.[g] in Apoc̄. is singnefied the vniuersite, either[h] al the multitude, of seintis. The vi. reule is of recapitulacoun, either[h] rehersing a thing don bifore, not in ordre, as it is sett; for whi summe thingis ben seid so, as if 'tho suen[i] in the ordre of tyme, either[k] ben teld bi contynuyng of thingis, that is, that ben ioyned next togidere, whanne the[l] telling is clepid a3en preuyly to the formere thingis, that weren left out; and if men vndirstonden not such seying bi this reule, thei erren; as in Genesis it is seid, "God plauntide paradys in Eden, at the eest, and settide "there the man that he foormyde, and God brou3te forth[m] 3it of erthe[n] ech fair tre," etc.; this is seid bi recapitulacoun. In lyk maner there "the lond was of oo lippe," that is, speche, it is seid bi recapitulacoun. The vij. reule is of the deuel and of his bodi, for he is heed of alle wickide men, that ben his body in a manere, and schulen go with him in to the[o] turment of euerlasting fijer, as Crist is the[p] heed of hooly chirche, which[q] is his body, and schal be with hym in rewme[r] and glorie[s] euerlastinge. Also thei that haue[t] lykinge for[u] to studie in holy writ, schulen[v] be chargid, that thei kunne the kyndis and maners[w] of spekingis in holy scriptures; and thei that perseyue diligently and holde wel in mynde, hou a thing is wont to be seid in holy scripturis. Also that is souereyn help[ww] and moost nedful, preie[x] thei, that God 3eue to hem the veri vndirstonding[y] of holy scripture, for thei reden in tho scripturis, aboute whiche thei ben studiouse, that God 3eueth[z] wisdom, and kunnyng, and vndirstonding of his face, that is, 3ifte and grace. Also if her stodie is don with meeknesse, and loue of cristen lore, it is of God. Austyn writith al this in the iij. book of Cristen Teching, aboute the myddil, and in the ende. Isidre, in the j. book of Souereyn Good, touchith these reulis schortliere, but I haue hym not now, and Lyre, in the bigynnyng of the bible, touchith more opinly these reulis, but I haue him not now, and Ardmacan, in the bigynnyng of his book de Questionibus Armenorum, 3eueth many goode groundis to vndirstonde holy scripture to the lettre, and goostly vndirstonding also, but I haue him not now. Also no thing may seme to[a] be wijsere, no thing of more eloquence, than is hooly[b] scripture, and the autours therof, that weren enspijrid of God. And thei ou3ten not to[c] speke in other manere than thei diden, and the prophetis, and moost Amos, weren ful eloquent, and seint[d] Poul waas ful eloquent in his pistlis. Also[e] the autouris of hooly scripture spaken derkly[f], that the preuyteis therof ben hid fro[g] vnfeithful men, and goode men ben exercisid, either[h] ocupied, and that in expounnynge hooly[i] scripture thei haue a newe

as vij. x. or xij. and suche othere, whiche noumbris ben sett sumtyme for al tyme, as "seuene sithis in "the day Lord I seide preisyng to thee," is no thing ellis than this, "Goddis preisyng is euer[k] in my "mouth;" also in the Apocalipis, bi an hundrid fourty and foure is signifiede al the vniuersite of seyntis. The sixte reule is of recapitulacion; summe thingis doon bifore ben seide, as if thei suen in ordre of tyme, or ben teld in next suyng of thingis, whanne the tellyng is pryuyli clepid a3en to the formere thingis that weren left. If scripture be not vndirstonden bi this reule, errour is gendrid, as in Genesis, "God plauntid paradise in Eden at the eest, and sette there man whom he foormede; and 3it God "brou3t forth ech faire tre of the erthe;" that is seid bi recapitulacion or rehersing of thing doon bifore. Also there, "in the lond was oo langage," is recapitulacion. The seuenthe reule is this, of the deuel and his bodi, for he is heed of al vnpitous, that ben his bodi in sum maner, that schulen go with him in to turment of euerlastyng fire; as Crist is heed of holy chirche, that is his bodi, that schal be with him in the rewme and glorie euerlastyng. Also in the eende of that book Austyn seith, "studiers of holi scrip-"ture schulden kunne the kynde of spekyngis in holi scripturis, and take heed, and holde in mynde in "what maner a thing is wont to be seide in hem, and also, that is souereyn and moost nedeful, preie thei "that thei vndirstonde, for the Lord 3eueth wisdom[l], and vndirstondyng and kunnyng is of him." grace, diuerse fro the first autouris. Austin, in the bigynnyng of the iiij. book of Cristen Teching. Also, as the litle richessis of Jewis, whiche thei baren awey fro Egipt, weren in[k] comparisoun of richessis[l] whieh thei hadden aftirward in Jerusalem, in the tyme of Salomon, so greet is the prophitable kunnynge of filosoferis bookis, if it is comparisouned to the kunnynge of hooly scripturis[m]; for whi what euer thing a man lernith withouten hooly writ, if the thing lerned[n] is veyn, it is dampned in holy writ, if it is prophitable, it is foundid there. And whanne a man fyndith theere alle thingis whiche he lernyde profitably in other place[nn], he schal fynde myche more plenteuously tho thingis in hooly scripture, whiche he lernede neuere in other place, but ben[o] lerned oonly in the wondirful hiȝnesse and in the wondirful meeknesse of hooly scripturis. Austin seith this in the ende of ij[p]. book of Cristen Teching. Also hooly scripture[q] conteyneth al prophitable treuthe, and alle othere sciencis preuyly in the vertu of wittis, either[r] vndirstondingis, as wynes[s] ben conteyned in grapis, as ripe corn is conteyned in the seed[t], as bowis ben conteyned in the rootis, and as trees ben conteyned in the kernels. Grostede, in a sermoun Premonitus a venerabili patre. Also hooly scripture wlatith sofymys, and seith, he that spekith sofisticaly, either[u] bi sofymys, schal be hatful, and he schal be defraudid in ech[v] thing, as the wijse man seith in xxxvij.[w] c̄. of Ecclesiastici. If filosoferis, and moost the disciplis of Plato, seiden eny treuthis, and prophitable to oure feith, not[x] oonly tho treuthis owen not to be dred, but also tho schulen be calengid into[y] oure vs, eithir[z] profijt, fro hem, as fro vniust possessouris. And as Jewis token, bi autorite of God, the gold, and syluer[a], and clothis of Egipcyans, so cristene men owen to take the trewe seyingis of filosoueris, for to worschippe oo God, and of techingis of vertues, whiche treuthis the filosoueris founden not, but diggeden out of the metals of Goddis puruyaunce, which is sched euery where. So dide Ciprian, the swettest doctour and moost blessid martir, so diden Lactancius, Victorinus, and Illarie, and Greekis withoute noumbre. Austin in ij.[b] book of Cristen Teching. Bi these reulis of Austin and bi iiij.[c] vndirstondingis of[d] hooly scripture, and bi wijs knowing of figuratijf spechis, with good lyuynge and meeknesse, and stodyinge of the bible, symple men moun sumdel vndirstonde the text of holy writ, and edefie myche hemself and other men; but for Goddis loue, ȝe symple men, be[e] war of pride, and veyn iangling and chyding in wordis aȝens proude clerkis of scole and veyn religions, and answere ȝee mekely and prudently to enemyes of Goddis lawe, and preie ȝe hertly for hem, that God of his greet mercy ȝeue to hem very knowing of scripturis, and meekenesse, and charite, and euere be ȝe redy, what euer[f] man techith eny treuthe of God, to take that meekely, and with greet thankingis to God; and if eny man in erthe, either[g] aungel of heuene, techith[h] ȝou the contrarie of holy writ, either[i] eny thing aȝens resoun and charite, fle[k] fro him in that, as fro the foul deuel[l] of helle, and holde ȝe stedfastly to lijf and deeth the treuthe and freedom of the hooly[m] gospel of Jhesu Crist, and take ȝe mekely mennis seyingis and lawis, onely[n] in as myche as thei acorden with holy writ and good conscience, and noo ferther, for lijf neither[o] for deth.

CAP. XIII.

Of vii. reulis of Austyn.

Also holy scripture is betere knowen bi licnesses[p] and bi derknessis[q]; it doth awey anoyes, and we owe to[r] thenke and bileeue, that the thing that is writen in holy scripture, ȝhe, thouȝ it be hid, either[s] not knowen, is betere and trewere than that[t] we moun vndirstonde bi vsself[u]; and worschipfully and heelfully the Holy Goost mesuride so holy scripturis, that in opyn placis he settide remedie to oure hungir, and in derk placis he wipte awey anoies; for almest no thing is seyn in tho derknessis, which[v] thing is not founden seid[w] ful pleynly in other placis. Therfore bifore[x] alle thingis it is nedeful, that a man be conuertid bi Goddis drede, and be mylde bi pite, either[y] cristen religioun; and that he aȝensie not hooly scripture, wher it be vnderstonden, thouȝ it smyte eny synnes of oure, whether it be not vndirstonden, as if we moun vndirstonde betere[z], either[a] comaunde, either[a] teche betere. Be the ȝifte of drede and of pitee, me comith to degre[b] of kunnyng, for whi ech fructuous man of hooly scripturis exercisith himself in this thing, and to fynde noon[c] other thing in tho, than for to loue God for God himself, and for to loue his neiȝebore for God. Thanne thilke drede, bi which he thenkith on Goddis dom, and thilke pite, bi which he must nedis bileeue and ȝeue stide to autorite of holy bookis, conpellith hym to beweyle hymself, for whi this kunnyng of good hope makith a man not to[d] auaunce[e] himself, but biweile himself; and bi this affeccioun, either[ee] good wille, he geetith with besy preieris the coumfort of Goddis help, that he be not broken bi dispeir; and[f] he bigynneth to be in the fourthe degre of goostly strengthe, in whiche he hungrith and thirstith riȝtfulnesse; thanne in the v. degree, that is, in the counceyl of mercy, he purgith the soule, that makith noise and vnrestfulnesse of coueitise of erthly thingis; and thanne he dispisith filthis of soule, and louith God and neiȝeboris, ȝhe enemyes; bi this he stiȝith to[g] the vj. degre, where he purgith[h] the iȝe of soule[i], bi which iȝe God may be seyn, as myche as he may be seyn of hem that diȝen to this world, as myche as thei mowen; for in so myche thei seen God in her soule, thourȝ feith and loue, hou myche thei diȝen to this world; 'and in[k] as myche as thei leuyn to[l] this world, thei seen not God; and in this degre, wherinne a man diȝith to the world, he neither preferrith, neither makith euene himself, neither[m] his neiȝebore, with the treuthe of hooly writ; therfore this hooly man schal be so symple and clene of herte, that neither for plesaunce of men he be drawe awey fro treuthe, nether[m] bi cause to eschewe eny harmys of[n] himself, that ben contrarie to this lijf[o], such a chiild stiȝith to verey wisdom, which is the laste and the vij., which he vsith in pees and in[oo] reste. Seint Austyn seith al this in the bygynnyng of the ij. book of Cristen Teching. Heere is a blissid entring bi these vij. vertues to the kunnyng of holy scripture in this lijf, to haue here[p] reste of soule, and aftirward ful reste of bodi and soule in heuene, withouten ende. Alas! what don proude and coueitouse wrecchis at hooly scripture, that seeken the world and fleschly eese, and wolen not conuerten hem fro 'these cursidnessis[q]; thei disseyuen hemself, and the puple that gessen hem wijse men, whanne thei ben opyn foolis; and maken hemself deppere dampned, and other men also that suen her folye, and blasfemyn God. Thes worldly foolis schulden wite, that hooly lijf is a[r] launterne to bringe a man to very kunnynge, as Crisostom seith, and the drede and loue of God is the[s] bigynning and perfeccioun of kunnyng and wijsdom; and whanne these fleschly apis and worldly moldewerpis han neither the bigynnyng of wijsdom, neither[t] desyren it, what doon thei at hooly scripture, to schenschipe of hemself and of othere men? As longe as pride and 'coueitise of[u] worldly goodis and[v] onouris[w] is rootid in her herte, thei maken omage to Satanas, and offren to him bothe bodi and soule, and al her witt and fynding. Such foolis schulden thenke, that wijsedom schal not entre into an yuel willid soule, neither schal dwelle in a body soget to synnes; and Jhesu Crist seith, that the fadir of heuene hijdith the preuytees of hooly scripture fro wijse men and prudent, 'that is wijse men and prudent[x] to the world, and[y] in her owne si3t, and schewith tho to meke men; therfore worldly foolis, do 3e first penaunce for 3oure synnes, and forsake[z] pride and coueitise, and be 3e meke, and drede 3e God in alle thingis, and loue[a] him ouer alle other thingis, and 3oure nei3eboris[c] as '3oure self[d]; and thanne 3e schulen profite in stodie of hooly writ. But alas! 'alas! alas[e]! the moost abomynacoun that euer was herd among cristen clerkis is now purposid in Yngelond, bi worldly clerkis and feyned religiouse, and in the cheef vniuersitee of oure[f] reume, as manye trewe men tellen with greet weylyng. This orrible and deuelis cursednesse is purposid of Cristis enemyes and traytouris of alle cristen puple, that no man schal lerne dyuynite, neither[g] hooly writ, no but he that hath doon his fourme in art, that is, that hath[h] comensid in art, and hath ben regent tweyne 3eer aftir; this wolde be ix. 3eer either[i] ten bifore that he lerne hooly writ, aftir that he can comunly wel his gramer, thou3 he haue a good witt, and traueile ful soore, and haue good fynding ix. either[k] x. 3eer aftir his grauer. This semith vttirly the deuelis purpos, that fewe men either[k] noon schulen[l] lerne and kunne Goddis lawe; but God seith bi Amos, on thre greete trespasis of Damask and[m] on the iiij., "I schal not conuerte him;" where Jerom seith, the firste synne is to thenke yuelis, the ij. synne is to consente[n] to weyward thou3tis, the iij. synne is to fille in werk, the iiij. synne is to do not penaunce aftir the synne, and to plese himself in his synne; but Damask is interpretid drinkynge blood[o], either[p] birling blood. Lord! whether[q] Oxunford drinke[r] blood and birlith[s] blood, bi sleeinge of quyke men, and bi doinge of sodomye, in leesinge a part of mannis blood, wherbi a chijld myte be fourmed, deme thei that knowen; and wher Oxunforde drinke blood of synne, and stirith othere men of the lond to do synne, bi booldnesse off clerkis, deme thei iustly, that seen it at i3e[t], and knowen bi experiens. Loke now[u] wher[v] Oxunford is in thre orrible synnes and in the fourthe, on which God restith not til he punsche it. Sumtyme children and 3unge men arsistris[w] weren deuout and clene as aungels, in comparisoun of othere, now men seyn thei ben ful of pride and leccherie, with dispitouse oothis, needles and false, and dispising of Goddis heestis; sumtyme cyuylians and canonistris[x] weren deuout, and so bisy on her lernyng, that they tooken ful litil reste of[y] bed, now men seyn that thei ben ful of pride and nyce aray, enuye, and coueitise, with leccherie, glotonie[yy] and ydilnesse; sumtyme dyuynys[z] weren ful hooly and deuout, and dispisiden outtirly the world, and lyueden as aungels in meeknesse, clennesse[zz], souereyn[a] chastite, and charite, and tau3ten treuly Goddis lawe in werk and word; now men seyn, thei ben as deligat of hir mouth[aa] and wombe, and as coueitouse as othere worldly men, and[b] flateren, and maaken leesingis in preching, to eschewe bodyly persecuscoun, and to gete benefices. The firste grete synne is generaly in the vniuersite, as men dreden and seen at i3e; the ij. orrible synne is sodomye and strong mayntenaunce thereof, as it is knowen to many persones of the reume, and at the laste parlement. Alas! dyuynys[bb], that schulden passe othere men in clennesse and hoolynesse, as aungels of heuene passen freel men in 'vertues, ben[c] moost sclaundrid of this cursid synne a3ens kynde. The iij. orrible synne is symonie, and forswering in the semble hous, that schulde be an hous of ri3tfulnesse and hoolynesse[d], where yuelis schulde[e] be redressid; this symonie with portenauncis[f] thereof is myche worse and more abomynable than bodily sodomye. 3it on these thre abomynacouns God wolde graciously conuerte clerkis, if thei wolden do very penaunce, and 3eue hem hooliche

to vertues; but on the iiij. most[g] abomynacoun purposid now to letten Cristen men, ȝhe prestis and curatis, to lerne freely Goddis lawe, til thei han[h] spendid ix. ȝeer either[i] x. at[k] art, that conprehendith many strong[l] errouris of hethene men aȝens Cristen bileeue, it seemith wel that God wole not[m] ceese of veniaunce, til it and othere ben punschid soore; for it seemith that worldly clerkis and feyned relygiouse don this, that symple men of wit and of fynding knowe not Goddis lawe, to preche it generaly aȝens synnes in the reume. But wite ȝe, worldly clerkis and feyned relygiouse, that God bothe can and may, if it lykith hym, speede symple men out of the vniuersitee, as myche to kunne hooly writ, as maistris in the vniuersite; and therfore no gret charge, thouȝ neuer man of good wille be poisend with hethen mennis errouris ix. ȝeer either[n] ten, but euere lyue wel and stodie hooly writ, bi elde doctouris and newe, and preche treuly and freely aȝens opin synnes, to his deth. See therfore what Jerom seith on Amos, God bifore seith[nn] yuels to[o] comynge, that men heere, and[p] amende hemself, and be delyuered fro the perel neiȝinge, either[q] if that thei dispisen, thei ben punschid iustiliere; and God, that bifore seith peynes, wole not punsche men that synnen, but that thei be amendid. Jerom seith this in the ‘ende of the[qq] j. book of Amos. God, for his gret mercy, graunte, that clerkis here the greet veniaunce manasid of God, and amende hemself treuly, that God punsche not hem; for if thei amenden not hemself, thei ben eretikis maad hard in her synnes; but see what Jerom seith aȝens eretikis, and in comendinge of hooly scripture; he seith thus on Amos, “ Eretikis that seruen “ the wombe and glotonye, ben clepid riȝtfully fattest kyin, either[r] kyin ful of schenschipe.” “ We owen to[s] take hooly scripture on[t] thre maneris; first, we owen vndirstonde[u] it bi the “ lettre, and do alle thingis that ben comaundid to vs therinne; the ij. tyme bi allegorie, “ that is, goostly vndirstonding; and in the iij. tyme bi blisse[v] ‘of thingis[w] to[x] comynge.” Jerom seith this in the ij. book on Amos, and in iiij.[y] c̄. of Amos. Natheles for Lyre cam late to me, see what he seith of[z] the vndirstonding of holy scripture; he writith thus on[a] the ij. prologe on the bible, “ Joon seith in v.[b] c̄. ‘of Apoc.[c] ‘ I syȝ a book written withinne “ and withouteforth in the hond of the sittere on the trone;’ this book is holy scripture, “ which is seid writen without forth, as[d] to the literal vndirstonding, and withinne, as to “ the[e] preuy and goostly vndirstonding;” and in the j. prologe he declarith iiij. vndirstondingis of hooly writ[f] in this manere, “ Holy writ hath this specialte, that vndir oo lettre it “ conteyneth many vndirstondingis, for the principal autour of hooly writ is God himself, “ in whos power it is, not oonly to vse wordis to singnifie a thing as men don, but also he “ vsith thingis singnefied bi wordis to singnefie other thingis; therfore bi the singnyfying “ bi wordis is taken the literal vndirstonding, either[g] historial, of holy scripture, and bi the “ singnefying which is maad bi thingis is taken the preuy, either[g] goostly vndirstonding, “ which is thre maneres[h], allegorik, moral, either[i] tropologik, and anogogik. CAP. XIV.

Hou the literal vndirstonding is grounde and foundement.

Natheles alle goostly vndirstondinges setten bifore, eithir[z] requyren, the literal vndirstonding, as the foundement; wherfore[a] as a bylding bowing awey fro the foundement is disposid to falling, so a goostly expociscoun, that discordith fro the literal sense, owith to be arettid vnseemely and vncouenable, either[b] lesse seemely, and lesse couenable; and therfore it is nedful to hem, that wolen profite in the stodie of holy scripture, to bigynne at the vndirstonding of literal sence, moost sithen[c] bi the literal sense aloone, and not bi goostly sencis[d] may be maad an argument, either[e] preef, to the[f] preuyng, either[g] declaring, of a doute, as Austin seith in his Pistle to Vincent Donatiste. Seint Isidre, in the firste book of Souereyn Good xx.[h] c̄. settith vij. reulis to expounne hooly scripture, and summe clepen these reulis the keies of scripture[i], for bi these rulis the vndirstonding of scripture is openid in many thingis[j]. The firste reule is of oure Lord Jhesu Crist, and of his goostly body, which is holy chirche, for whi for[k] the[l] knytting togidere of the heed to the body hooly scripture spekith sumtyme of euer either vndir oo resoun, as vndir oo persone, and passith fro oon to anothir, in ensaumple in lxj.[m] c°. of Isaie it is seid, " He clothide me with clothis " of helthe, and he compasside me with clothing[n] of riȝtfulnesse, as a spouse maad fair with " a coroune, and as a spousesse ourned with hire brochis;" for whi this that is seid " as a[o] " spouse," etc.[p] is vndirstonden of Crist, and this that sueth " as a[q] spousesse" etc.[r] is vndirstonden of holy chirche. Also in the j. c̄. of Songis it is seid, " Kisse he me with the " cosse of his mouth, for thi tetis ben betere than wyn;" for whanne it is seid, " kisse " he me" etc., it is the word of the spousesse desiringe to haue the spouse; and this that sueth, " for thi tetis," etc. is the word of the spouse, preising the spousesse; wherfore in such thingis, knyt so togidere bi resoun biforeseid, a prudent redere owith to perseyue what accordith to the heed, and what to the body. The ij. reule is of the very body and of the feyned body of oure Lord Jhesu Crist, for whi hooly chirche, which[s] is the goostly body of Crist, is a nett which is not drawen ȝit to the brinke; therfor[t] it hath yuele men meddlid with goode men til[u] to the doom, in whiche these schulen be departid fro hem, and therfore in holy scripture yuele men ben preisid sumtyme with goode men, with whiche[v] thei ben medlid; as in the[w] xj. c̄. of Osee God seith thus, " Israel is a chijld, and I louede " him;" and aȝenward sumtyme goode men ben blamed with yuel men, as in j.[x] c°. of Isaie, " An oxe knew his lord and an asse knew the cracche of his lord, but Israel knew not me " and my puple vndirstood not[y];" and sumtyme in the same resoun it is expressid what perteyneth to goode men and what to yuele men, as in j.[z] c°. of Songis it is seid, " I am " blac but fair, ȝe douȝtris of Jerusalem, as the tabernaclis of Cedar, as the skynnes of " Salamon;" these ben the wordis of the spousesse, which for resoun of yuel men conteyned in the chirche, seith, " I am blac," but for resoun of goode men it addith, " but fair;" and this that sueth, as for ensaumple, " as the tabernaclis[a] of Cedar," is referrid to yuele men; for whi Cedar was the sone of Ysmael, as it is seid in xxv.[b] c°. of Genesis, of whom Saracenus[c] camen forth, and this that is addid, " as the skynnes of Salamon," is referrid to goode men. Therfore bi Salamon here is vndirstonden God himself, bi cristen expocitouris and Ebreies; and therfore the skynnes of Salamon ben seid tho with which the tabernacle[d] was heelid, in which tabernacle goode men worschipiden God. The iij. reule is of the spirit and of the lettre; this reule is expounned thus comunly, that the historial, either[e] literal sense, and the mystik, either[e] goostly sense, is taken vndir the same lettre, for whi the treuthe of the storie schal be holden, and natheles it schal be referrid to the goostly vndirstonding. This reule may be expounned[f] also in another[g] manere, that it be referrid oonly[gg] to the literal sense, as othere reulis ben; aboute which thing it is to see, that the same lettere hath sum tyme double literal sense, in ensaumple[h] in j.[i] book of Paralypomynon, xvij.[k] c°., God seith to[l] Salamon, " I schal be to him in to[m] a fadir, and he schal be to " me into a sone;" and this to[n] the lettere is vndirstonden of Salomon, in as myche as he was the sone of God, bi grace in ȝungthe, wherfore[o] Nathan the prophete clepide hym, " amyable to the Lord" in ij.[p] book of Kingis, xij. c̄. Also the forseid autorite, " I schal " be to hym in to a fadir," etc. is brouȝt in of Poul in j.[q] c°. to Ebreis, as[r] seid to the lettre of Crist himself, and this is opyn bi this, that Poul bringith it[s] in to preue, that Crist is more than aungels; but such preuynge may not be maad bi goostly sense, as Austin seith aȝens Vincent Donatiste; forsothe the forseid autorite was fillid to the lettre in Salomon, natheles lesse ꝑfitly, for he was the sone of God oonly bi grace, but it was fillid parfitlier in Crist, that was the sone of God bi kinde; but natheles euer either expocisscioun is literal outtirly. Natheles the ij. expociscoun, which is of Crist, is goostly and preuy[ss] in sum maner, in as myche as Salamon was the figure of Crist. The iiij. reule is of al and of part, for whi scripture passith fro oon to the tothere[t], and aȝenward, as in xiij.[u] c°. of Isaie, the scripture spekith first aȝens Babilone specialy, whanne it is seid, " the birthen of Babi- " lone," and thanne the scripture passith to vndirstonde the word generaly of al the world[v], bi this that sueth, " the Lord cometh fro the hyȝnesse of heuene, and the vessels of his " stronge veniaunce comen, that he distroie all erthe;" aftirward the scripture turneth aȝen to speke aȝens Babilone specialy, whanne it is seid, " Lo! I schal rise on ȝou Medeys, that " schul not seeke syluer;" for whi Darius Medey, with Cirus, his cosyn, took Babilone, and killide Baltasar, the king of Babilone, as it is seid in the[w] v. c°. of Daniel. The v. reule is of tymes, which reule bifallith[x] in iiij. maners; in oo manere bi a figure clepid synodoches, whanne a part of tyme is set for al the tyme, as it is seid in the gospel, that Crist lay thre daies in the sepulcre, and natheles the firste day and the thridde weren not hool daies. In another maner this reule bifallith for smale partys of tyme, that ben noumbrid sumtyme in scripture, and sumtyme ben left out, and bi this the scripture that spekith of sum noumbre of ȝeris, in manye placis, settith sumtyme moo ȝeris, rekenynge the foreseid smale partys, in another place it settith fewere ȝeeris, in leuyng out the smale partys. In iij.[y] maner[z] this reule bifallith[a], for that the rekenyng of ȝeeris bigynneth in oo place at the formere terme, and[b] in another place at the latter teerme, as in xv.[c] c°. of Genesis, it was said to Abraham, that his seed schal be a pilgrym bi iiij. c. ȝeer, and in xij.[d] c°. of Exodi it is seid of this[e] pilgrimage, that the dwelling of the sones of Israel in the lond of Egipt was of[f] iiij. c. ȝeer and xxx., for the rekenyng of this more noumbre bigynneth at the tyme, in which it was seid to Abraham in xij.[g] c°. of Genesis, " go out of thi lond," etc., and the rekenyng of the lesse noumbre bigynneth at the natyuite of Isaac, that was xxx. ȝeer aftir the goinge out of Abraham fro Aran. The iiij. tyme this reule bifallith, for that hooly scripture spekith of thing[h] to comynge bi the maner of thing passid, as in the ix. c°. of Isaie, "a litil child "was born to vs," etc.; and this is to singnefie the certeynte of profecie, whos bifalling of tyme to comynge is so certeyn, as if it were passid now; and this is for certeynte of Goddis bifore knowing, bi whiche the reuelacoun is maad to the prophete. Natheles such maner of speche hath noo place, no but in profecie of predestynacoun, either[i] ful determynyng of God; which prophecie is, whanne a thing to comynge in noun certeyn to mannis knowing, is schewid to the prophete in that maner, bi which it is in the bifore knowing of God, which bifore knowing of[k] God bihooldith so without fayling thingis to comynge, as thingis present and passid. But in profecie[l] of manaasinge, such maner of[m] speech hath noo place, which profecie of manaas is, whanne eny[mm] peyne worthi to be brou3t in on a[n] puple, either[o] on a persoone, is schewid to the prophete, not bi that that it[p] is in the bifore knowing of God, but bi the ordre of secunde causis, as bi the yuel disseruyngis of men; as is thilke[q] prophecie of Jonas iij.[r] c°., "3it xl. daies, and Nynyue schal be distroied;" for whi the synnes of that citee hadden disseruyd this distroying; natheles for such a cause is chaungable, therfore sumtyme the effect, that is, peyne manaasid, sueth not, as heere, for 'Nynyuytis diden[s] penaunce, and so the Lord brou3te not in the peyne manassid. The vj. reule is of recapitulacoun, that is, rehersing[t] of thing[u] don bifore, and of anticipacoun, either[v] bifore takinge, that is, setting in of thing bifore that it[w] is don; for in hooly scripture not euere stories and deedis ben writen in the same ordre in whiche thoo ben don, and therfore whanne lattere[ww] thingis ben sett bifore, it is seid anticipacioun, either[x] byfore taking, and whanne the formere thingis ben set byhynde, it[y] is seid recapitulacoun, either[z] rehersing of thing[a] doon bifore, as in x.[b] c°. of Genesis it is seid of the sones of Noe, "the ilis of hethene "folkis in her cuntrees weren departid of these sones of Noe, ech man bi his langage[bb];" and withinne in[c] the[d] same x. c°. it is seid, "these ben the sones of Cham, in kynredis and "langagis," and aftirward it is seid in xj.[e] c°., "the lond was of oo langage and of the same "wordis;" wherof it is opin, that this that is bifore seid of the departyng of langagis, is seid bi anticipacoun; in lyk maner in ij.[f] c°. of Genesis, aftir that Moises in j.[g] c°. hadde discriued the creacoun, either[h] making of nou3t of heuene and of erthe, and the departing and ournyng[i] of the world, he seide, "these ben the generacouns of heuene and of erthe, in the day in whiche[k] tho weren mad;" wherof it is opin that this[kk] is seid bi recapitulacoun, either[l] rehersing of thing[m] don bifore. The vij. reule is of the deuil and of his body, for as Gregori seith in the x. Omelie, "Certys the deuil is heed of alle wickid men, and alle "wickide men ben membris of this heed," and therfore for the knytting togidere of the heed to the membris, the scripture that spekith of oon, passith in the same knytting togidere of resoun to speke of the tother, as in xiiij.[n] c°. of Isaie, where the scripture spekith of the king of Babilone, that was a membre of the deuil, it passith to speke of the prince of fendis, whanne it is[o] seid there, "Lucifer, that rysidist eerly, hou feldist thou doun fro "heuene;" and in the[p] xxviij. c. of Ezechiel, where the scripture spekith of the prince of Tire, it passith to speke of the deuil, whanne it is addid, "thou, a[q] singnet, either[r] a prente, "of the licnesse of God, were ful of wisdom, and parfit in fairnesse, in the[s] delices of "paradys of God." Lyre seith al[t] this in the ij. prologe of[u] Genesis. Heere[uu] Lire rehersith the sentence of seint Austyn, and of Isidre in these reulis, and declarith hem opinly bi holy scripture[v] and resoun, and countrith not Austin, but declareth him ful mychel[w] to symple mennis witt[x]; and addith more bi scripture and resoun, that Austin touchith not.

Thou3 these reulis either[y] keies of scripture bringen men to greet vndirstonding therof, 3it men moten taken heede, what is seid of Crist bi his godheed, and what bi his manheed, for Crist bi his manheed, is seid lesse than the[z] fadir, and bi the godheed he is seid euene with the fadir; and for as myche as Crist is bothe God and man, we graunten that God is[a] deedly, and di3ede on the crosse, not bi his godheed, but bi the manheed of Crist, that was ioyned in oonhed of persone with the godheed, and we graunte, as the gospel doith, that man[b], while he was deedly on[c] erthe, was in heuene, for his godheed was there, and he also bi resoun therof. Also we moun graunte wel, that a man made heuene and erthe, for Crist bi his godheed, which Crist is and was man, dide[d] thus. Also[e] hooly scripture tellith ofte the thou3tis of men, and ofte the wordis and deedis; and whanne the thou3tis, and wordis, and deedis of men ben contrarie, oo gospeller[f] tellith the thou3tis, and[g] another tellith the wrdis; and bi this equiuocacoun, either[h] diuerse speking, thei ben acordid, 3he, whanne thei seemen contrarie in wordis; also ofte in storial mateer scripture rehersith the comune opynyoun of men, and affirmeth not, that it was so in dede. In this maner the gospel seith, that Joseph was the fadir of Crist, thou3 he neuere gendride Crist; for Marie, Cristis modir, was euere clene virgyne. Thus the gospel seith, that at the biheeding of Joon Baptist, Eroude was soory, and 3it, as doctouris seyn, he was ful glad therof; but he feynede him sory for the puple, and the puple gessid him sory. Also thou3 scripture[i] rehersith, hou hooly men lyueden, and comendith hem greetly, it appreueth not alle hire deedis, for many greete seyntis erriden foule in manye poyntis; and thou3 scripture tellith the stories of yuel men and dampned, it repreuith not herfore alle thingis whiche thei diden, for thou3 thei weren hemsilf ful cursid, thei diden many goode deedis of kynde, and sumtyme perauenture goode[k] dedis of vertu, if thei weren in grace for a tyme. At the laste take 3e[l] good heede, whanne scripture spekith bi comaundement to all men, and whanne it 3eueth comaundement to certeyn persones of diuerse statis. In the first poynt, alle men moten[m] do, as it seith; in the[n] ij. tyme, the persoones of staatis specified moten[o] nedis obeye; whanne[p] scripture speketh oonly bi counceil, men moun be sauid, thou3 thei do not the counceil, as ful many men and wymmen moun be sauid, thou3 thei take not virginite, neither[q] contynence, neither[q] 3euen alle her goodis to pore men, and 3it these ben heere[r] counceils of Jhesu Crist in the gospel.

Hou God di3ede on the crosse.

CAP. XV.

For as myche as Crist seith that the gospel shal be prechid in al the world, and Dauith seith of the postlis and her preching, "the soun of hem 3ede out into ech lond, and the "wordis of hem 3eden out into the endis of the world," and eft Dauith seith, "the Lord "schal telle in the scripturis of puplis, and of these princis that weren in it," that is, in holi chirche, and as Jerom seith on that vers, "hooly writ is the scripture of puplis, for it is "maad, that alle puples schulden[s] knowe it," and the princis of the chirche, that weren therinne, ben the postlis, that hadden autorite to writen hooly writ, for bi that same that the postlis writiden her scripturis bi autorite, and confermynge of the Hooly Goost, it is hooly scripture, and feith of cristen men, and this dignite hath noo man aftir hem, be he neuere so hooly, neuer[t] so kunnynge, as Jerom witnessith on that vers. Also Crist seith[u] of the Jewis that crieden Osanna to him in the temple, that thou3 thei weren stille stoonis schulen[v] crie, and bi stoonis he vndirstondith hethen men, that worshipiden stoonis for her goddis. of Goddis heriyng[a], so oure lewide men, suynge the corner ston Crist, mowen be singnefied bi stonis, that ben harde and abydinge in the foundement; for thouȝ couetouse clerkis ben woode by simonie, eresie, and manye othere synnes, and[aa] dispisen and stoppen holi writ, as myche as thei moun, ȝit the lewid puple crieth aftir holi writ, to kunne it, and kepe it, with greet cost and peril of here lif. For these resons and othere[b], with comune charite to saue alle men in oure rewme, whiche God wole haue sauid, a symple creature hath translatid the bible out of Latyn into English. First, this symple creature hadde myche trauaile, with diuerse felawis and helperis[c], to gedere manie elde biblis, and othere doctouris, and comune glosis, and to make oo[d] Latyn bible sumdel trewe; and thanne to studie it of the newe, the text with the glose, and othere doctouris, as he miȝte gete, and speciali Lire on the elde testament, that helpide ful myche in this werk; the thridde tyme to counseile with elde gramariens, and elde dyuynis, of harde wordis, and harde sentencis, hou tho[e] miȝten best be vndurstonden and translatid; the iiij. tyme to translate as cleerli[ee] as he coude to the sentence, and to haue manie gode felawis and kunnynge at the correcting of the translacioun. First it is to[f] knowe, that the best translating[g] is out of Latyn into English, to translate aftir the sentence, and not oneli aftir the wordis, so that the sentence be as opin, either[h] openere, in English as in Latyn, and go not fer fro the lettre; and if the lettre mai not be suid in the translating, let the sentence euere be hool and open, for the wordis owen to serue to the entent and sentence, and ellis the wordis ben superflu either[i] false. In translating into English, manie resolucions moun make the sentence open, as an[k] ablatif case absolute may be resoluid into these thre wordis, with couenable[l] verbe, the while, for, if, as gramariens seyn; as thus, the maistir rediuge, I stonde, mai be resoluid thus, while the maistir redith, I stonde, either[m] if the maistir redith[n], etc. either[o] for the maistir, etc.; and sumtyme it wolde acorde wel with the[p] sentence to be resoluid into whanne, either[q] into aftirward, thus, whanne the maistir red, I stood, 'either[q] aftir the maistir red, I stood[r]; and sumtyme it mai wel be resoluid into a verbe of the same tens, as othere ben in the same resoun, and into this word et, that is, and in English, as thus, arescentibus hominibus præ timore, that is, and men shulen wexe drie for drede. Also a participle of a[s] present tens, either[t] preterit, of actif vois, eithir[t] passif, mai be resoluid into a verbe of the same tens, and a coniunccioun copulatif[ss], as thus, dicens, that is, seiynge, mai be resoluid thus, and seith, eithir[t] that seith; and this wole, in manie placis, make the sentence open, where to[u] Englisshe it[v] aftir the word, wolde[w] be derk and douteful. Also a relatif, which mai be resoluid into his antecedent with a coniunccioun copulatif, as thus, which renneth, and he renneth. Also whanne oo word is oonis set in a reesoun, it mai be set forth as ofte as it is vndurstonden, either[x] as ofte as reesoun and nede axen; and this word autem, either[x] vero, mai stonde for forsothe, either[x] for but, and thus I vse comounli; aud sumtyme it mai stonde for and, as elde gramariens seyn. Also whanne riȝtful construccioun is lettid bi relacion, I resolue it[y] openli, thus, where this reesoun, Dominum formidabunt adversarij ejus, shulde be Englisshid thus bi the[z] lettre, the Lord hise aduersaries shulen[a] drede, I Englishe[b] it thus bi resolucioun, the aduersaries of the Lord shulen drede him; and so of othere resons that ben like. At the bigynnyng I purposide, with Goddis helpe, to make the sentence as trewe and open[c] in English as it is in Latyn, either[d] more trewe and more open than it is in Latyn; and I preie, for charite and for comoun profyt of cristene soulis, that if ony wiys man fynde ony defaute of the truthe of[e] translacioun, let him sette in the trewe sentence and opin of holi writ, but loke that he examyne truli his Latyn bible, for no doute he shal fynde ful[f] manye 'biblis in Latyn[g] ful[h] false, if he loke manie, nameli[i] newe; and the comune Latyn biblis han more nede to be correctid, as manie as I haue seen in my lif, than hath the English bible late translatid; and where the Ebru, bi witnesse of Jerom, of[k] Lire, and othere expositouris discordith fro oure[l] Latyn biblis, I haue set in the margyn, bi maner[m] of a glose, what the[n] Ebru hath, and hou it is vndurstondun in sum place; and I dide this most in the Sauter, that of alle oure[o] bokis discordith most fro Ebru[p]; for the chirche redith not the Sauter bi the laste translacioun of Jerom out of Ebru into Latyn, but another translacioun of othere men, that hadden myche lasse kunnyng and holynesse[q] than Jerom hadde; and in ful fewe bokis the chirche redith the translacioun of Jerom, as it mai be preuid bi the propre origynals of Jerom, whiche he gloside. And where I haue translatid as opinli or[r] opinliere in English as in[s] Latyn, late wise men deme, that knowen wel bothe langagis[t], and knowen wel the sentence of holi scripture. And wher[u] I haue do thus, or[v] nay, ne[vv] doute, thei that kunne wel the sentence of holi writ and English togidere, and wolen[w] trauaile, with Goddis grace, theraboute, moun make the bible as trewe and as opin, ȝea[ww], and opinliere[x] in English than it is in Latyn. And no doute to[y] a symple man, with Goddis grace and greet trauail, men[z] miȝten[a] expoune myche openliere and shortliere the bible in English, than the elde greete[b] doctouris han expounid it[c] in Latyn, and myche sharpliere and groundliere than manie late postillatouris, eithir[d] expositouris, han don. But God, of his grete merci, ȝeue to vs grace to lyue wel, and to seie the truthe in couenable manere, and acceptable to God and his puple, and to spille not oure tyme, be it short be it long at Goddis ordynaunce. But summe, that semen wise and holi, seyn thus, if men now weren as holi as Jerom was, thei miȝten translate out of Latyn into English, as he dide out of Ebru and out of Greek into Latyn, and ellis thei shulden not translate[e] now, as hem thinkith, for defaute of holynesse and of kunnyng. Thouȝ this replicacioun seme colourable, it[f] hath no good ground, neither[g] resoun, neithir[g] charite, for whi this replicacioun is more aȝens seynt Jerom, and aȝens the firste lxx. translatouris, and aȝens holi[h] chirche, than aȝens symple men, that translaten now into English; for seynt Jerom was not so holi as the apostlis and euangelistis, whos bokis he translatide into Latyn, neither he hadde so hiȝe ȝiftis of the Holi Gost as thei hadden; and myche more the lxx. translatouris weren not so holi as Moises and the[i] profetis, and speciali Dauith, neither thei hadden so greete ȝiftis of God, as Moises and the prophetis hadden. Ferthermore holi chirche appreueth, not oneli the trewe translacioun of meene cristene men, stidefast in cristene feith, but also of open eretikis, that diden awei manie mysteries of Jhesu Crist bi gileful translacioun, as Jerom witnessith in oo[k] prolog on Job, and in the prolog[l] of[ll] Daniel. Myche more late the chirche of Engelond appreue the trewe and hool translacioun of symple men, that wolden for no good in erthe, bi here witing and power, putte awei the leste truthe, ȝea, the leste lettre, either[m] title, of holi writ, that berith substaunce, either[m] charge. And dispute thei not of the holynesse of men now lyuynge in this deadli lif, for thei kunnen not theron, and it is reseruid oneli to[n] Goddis doom. If thei knowen ony notable defaute bi the translatouris, either[o] helpis of hem, lete hem blame the defaute bi charite and merci, and lete hem neuere dampne a thing that mai be don lefulli bi Goddis lawe, as weeryng of a[p] good cloth for a tyme, either[q] riding on[r] an hors for a greet iourney, whanne thei witen not wherfore it is don; for suche thingis moun be don of symple men[s], with as greet charite and vertu, as summe, that holden hem[qq] greete and wise, kunnen ride in[rr] a gilt[ss] sadil, either[t] vse cuyssyns and beddis and clothis of gold and of silk, with othere vanitees of the world. God graunte pite, merci[u], and charite, and loue of comoun profyt, and putte awei such foli domis, that ben aȝens resoun and charite. ȝit worldli clerkis axen gretli what spiryt makith idiotis hardi to translate now the bible into English, sithen the foure greete doctouris dursten neuere do this? This replicacioun is so lewid, that it nedith noon answer, no[v] but 'stillnesse, eithir curteys[w] scorn; for these greete doctouris weren noon English men, neither[x] thei[y] weren conuersaunt among English men, neithir[z] in caas thei kouden the[a] langage of English, but thei ceessiden neuere til thei hadden holi writ in here[b] modir tunge, of here owne puple. For Jerom, that was a Latyn man of birthe, translatide the bible, bothe out of Ebru and out of Greek, into Latyn, and expounide ful myche therto; and Austyn, and manie mo Latyns expouniden the bible, for manie partis, in[c] Latyn, to Latyn men, among whiche thei dwelliden[d], and Latyn was a comoun langage to here puple aboute Rome, and biȝondis, and on this half, as Englishe is comoun[e] langage to oure puple, and ȝit this day the comoun puple in Italie spekith Latyn corrupt[ee], as trewe men seyn, that han ben in Italie; and the noumbre of translatouris out of Greek into Latyn passith mannis knowing, as Austyn witnessith in the ij. book of Cristene Teching, and seith thus, " the translatouris " out of Ebru into Greek moun be noumbrid, but Latyn translatouris, either[f] thei that " translatiden into Latyn, moun not be noumbrid in ony manere." For in the firste tymes[g] of feith, ech man, as a Greek book came to him, and he semyde to[h] him silf to haue sum kunnyng of Greek and of Latyn, was hardi to translate; and this thing helpide more than lettide vndurstonding, if rederis ben not necligent, forwhi the biholding of manie bokis hath shewid ofte, eithir[i] declarid, summe 'derkere sentencis[k]. This seith Austyn there. Therfore Grosted seith, that it was Goddis wille, that diuerse men translatiden, and that diuerse translacions[l] be in the chirche, for where oon seide derkli, oon either[m] mo seiden openli. Lord God! sithen at the bigynnyng of feith so manie men translatiden into Latyn, and to greet profyt of Latyn men, lat oo symple creature of God translate into English, for profyt[n] of English men; for if worldli clerkis loken wel here croniclis and bokis, thei shulden fynde, that Bede translatide the bible, and expounide myche in[o] Saxon, that was English, either[p] comoun langage of this lond, in his tyme; and not oneli Bede, but also king Alured, that foundide Oxenford, translatide in hise laste daies the bigynning of the Sauter into Saxon, and wolde more, if he hadde lyued lengere. Also Frenshe men, Beemers, and Britons han the bible, and othere bokis of deuocioun[q] and of exposicioun[r], translatid in here modir langage; whi shulden not English men haue the same in here modir langage, I can not wite, no[s] but for falsnesse and necgligence of clerkis, either[t] for oure puple is not worthi to haue so greet grace and ȝifte of God, in peyne of here olde synnes. God for his merci amende these euele causis, and make oure puple to haue, and kunne, and kepe truli holi writ, to lijf and deth! But in translating[u] of wordis equiuok, that is, that hath[v] manie significacions vndur oo lettre, mai liȝtli be pereil, for Austyn seith in the[w] ij. book of Cristene Teching, that if equiuok wordis be not translatid into[x] the sense, either[y] vndurstonding, of the autour, it is errour; as in that place of the[z] Salme, the feet of hem beu swifte to shede out blood, the Greek word is equiuok to sharp and swift, and he that translatide[a] sharpe feet, 'erride, and a book that hath sharpe feet[b], is fals, and mut be[c] amendid; as that sentence vnkynde ȝouge trees shuleu not ȝeue depe rootis, owith to be thus, plauntingis of auoutrie shuleu not ȝeue depe rootis. Austyn seith this there. PREFATORY EPISTLES OF ST. JEROME.

Heere bigynnith the epystle of saynt Jerom preest of alle the bokes of Goddis storye[a].

CAP. I.

BROTHER Ambrose, to me thi litel ȝiftis perfitli berynge, hath brouȝt with and riȝt[b] swete lettres, the whiche han shewid sothfastnes of now[c] proued feith, fro the bigynnyng of frenshipes[d], and newe thingis of[e] olde frenship[f]. Verrei forsothe that frenship is, and thurȝ the glew of Crist cowplid, the which not profit of famylier thing, not presens oonli of bodies, not grasping and trecherous flateryng, but the drede of God and the studies of Goddis scripturys ioynen. We han redde in olde stories, sum men to han vyrounde[g] prouynces, to han gon to new puplis, to han passid the see, that hem whom thei han knowun of bokis, myȝten seen verreli present. So Pictagorax to the filosofers of Memphus[h], so Plato to Egipte, and to Archite Tarentyne[i], and thilk[k] brynk of Itali, the which sum tyme was seid Grete Grece, ful traueilousli ȝede; that he that in Athenys was a maister and myȝti, and[l] whos doctrine the stodies of Achademy perfitli sowneden, wolde be maad a pilgrym and a disciple, more wilnyng[m] other mennus thingis shamfastli to lernen, than his owne vnshamfastli 'to prece[n] forth. Aftirward whil he pursueth fleynge lettres as in al the world, takun of see theues and sold, also to a ful cruel tiraunt pered, led cheytif, boundun, and thral. Neuerthelater for he was a filosofre, he was more than his bier. To Tite Lyuy, wellynge with the[o] mylk welle of faire speche, we han red, summe noble men to han comen

Jerom in his Prolog on the Byble[a].

CAP. I.

BROTHIR Ambrose, bryngynge fully thi litil ȝiftis to me, brouȝte al so riȝt sweete lettris, the whiche han shewid the sothfastnesse of feith that is now preued, and al so newe tidyngis of olde frenschip. For certeyn that is veri frenschip, and couplid with the glew of Crist, which not onely the profijt of homely thing, neither onely presense[b] of bodies, neither graspyng or trecherouse flateryng, ioyneth; but that drede[c] of God and the studies of hooly scriptures councelen to gideres. We han red in olde stories, that sum men han go aboute prouynces, and that they han go to newe puplis, and that thei han passid the see, that thei myȝte se openly present hem that[d] they knewen bi redyng of bookis. So[e] Pictagoras, the filosofere, ȝede to the filosoferes of Memphies; so Plato wente to Egipt, and to Archite Tarentyne, and passide ful trauelously thilke same coostis of Italie, the[f] which sum tyme was seid Grete Grece; that he that was maistir[g] and myȝty in Athenes, and whos doctryne the scoles of Achademye perfitly sowneden, wolde be maad a pilgrym and a discyple, rather wilnynge to lerne shamefastly othere mennus studies, than to prece forth his owne vnshamefully[h]. Aftirward while he pursueth lettris fleynge in[i] al the world, whanne he was take of theues of the see and seld, he apperyde also[k] to a ful cruel tiraunt, and was lad prisoner, and bound, and thral. Netheles for he was a filosofere, he was more than his biere. Also we han red, that sum noble men han comen fro the vtteneste coostis of Spayne and of Fraunce to Appolonye, eithir thilke dyuynour as the comynte spekith, eithir a filosofore as Pictagoras disciplis tellen, entride in to Persis, and passide ouer to the cuntre of Caucasun, and Albanes, and Scitas, and Massagetas, and 3ede thour3 the moost plenteuouse kyngdomes of Ynde; and at the last whanne he hadde passid ouer the ful brood flood of Phison, he cam to Bragmanas, that he shulde[m] heere Hiarche sittynge in a golden troone, and drynke[n] of the welle of Tantaly, techynge, among a fewe disciplis, of nature, of vertuous[o] maneris, and of the cours of dayes and of sterrys; and fro thennes he 3ede by Elamytes, bi folk of Babyloyne, and of Caldeis, and men of Meede, and of Assirie, and of Parthie, and Sire[p], and bi folk of Fenyce, and of[q] Arabie, and bi[r] Palestynes, and whanne he was turned a3en to Alysaundire, he wente to Ethiopie, that he my3te se the[s] maistris of studies, and the moost famouse boord of the sunne in grauel[t]. Thilke man foond ouer al that he my3te lerne, that he euere profitynge my3te be maade bettere than he him silf was to fore. Vpon this Philostratus wroot ful pleynlich in viij. volyms.

The dede of the quyk vois hath[g] I not what of hidde inward worchyng, and into the eris of the disciple fro the mouth of the autour the vois ouer3otun strengerli[h] sowneth. Wherfor and Eschyneus, whan he was exylid into Rodi, and was redde thilk[i] orisoun of Demostens, that a3ens hym he hadde, wondrynge alle men and preisynge, si-3ynge seith[k], "what if thilk[l] beest 3e hadden "herd tellinge his owne wordis!"

CAP. III.

Ne[m] this Y seye, that there be eny thing in me siche, that other thou my3tist of me here, or woldist lerne; but whether[n] with thi feruour and studie of lernyng, also with outen vs, shulde be proued bi hem silf; a wit able to be tau3t and with outen techer is preisable. Not what thou fyndist[o], but what thou sechist[p], we taken heed. Neshe wax and li3t to formen, 3he, if the hondis of the crafti man and of the fourmer cesen, neuertheles with ynne thoru3 vertu is al what 'euere may[q] be. Poul the apostle at the feet of Gamaliel glorieth hym silf to haue lernyd the lawe of Moyses and the prophetis, that he, armed with spirytual daartis, aftyrward my3te seie tristily, "forsothe the armes of our kni3hode "ben not fleishli, but my3ti thoru3 God to the "distruccoun of holdis, that we be destruyinge "thou3tis, and al hei3nes[r] reisynge it silf a3ens "the kunnyng of God, and chatyuynge al vndir-"stondyng for to obeishe to Crist, and redi to "vndir3oken al inobeishaunce." To Tymothe tau3t in holi lettres fro childhode he wryteth, and enorteth[s] the[t] studie of lessoun, lest he leue of the[u] grace, the which is 3ouun to hym bi imposicoun of the prestis hond[v]. To Tite he comaundide, among[w] other vertues of a bishop, whom in short sermoun he depeyntid, that kunnyng also he leue not of scripturis, "holdynge," he seith, "that[x] sermoun, the which is aftir doc-"trine trewe sermoun, that he be my3ti to "myche styre[y] in holsum doctryne, and the "withseieris[z] to withstonde."

Tite, he expownede the gospel with the apostlis, lest perauenture he hadde runne and shulde haue runne in veyn. The dede of the quyk vois of Goddis word hath I noot what of hid inward spedeful worchyng, and whanne the[z] voys is spred abrood in to the eeris of the[a] disciple from the mouth of the auctor, it sowneth the more strongly. Wherfor whanne Eschines was exilid in to Rody, and thilke orisoun of Demostenes was red, that he hadde anentis him, alle men wondrynge and preisynge, he seide sore si33yng, "what if 3e hadden "herd thilke beest tellynge his owne wordis!"

CAP. III.

I seie not this, as thou3 ther were ony sich goodnesse in me, that thou my3tist either here of me, either woldist lerne; but wher with thi feruent loue and studie of lernyng also shulde be proued bi him silf withouten us; for a wit able to be tau3t and without a techere is presable. We taken not heede what thou shuldist fynde, but what thou shuldist seche. Neische wax and li3t to fourmen, 3he[b], thou3 the hondis of the crafti man and of the fourmere ceessen, netheles withinne forth in the wax thour3 vertu is al maner shap, that may be maad therof. Poul the apostle ioieth that he him silf hadde lerned the lawe of Moyses and the profetis at the feet of Gamaliel, that he, armed with spirytual dartis, my3te aftirward speke tristily, "for armers[c] "of oure kny3thod ben not fleishly, but the power "of God to the distruccioun of synful wardis, that "we be distriynge yuele thou3tis, and alle hi3nesse "enhaunsynge him silf a3en[d] the kunnyng of God, "and holdynge lowe al vndirstondyng to obeie to "Crist, and redy to vndur3oke al vnbuxumnesse[e]." He writith to Tymothe wel lerned in hooly lettris fro childhod, and he amonestith him to the studie of redyng, lest he dispise the grace, 'the which[f] was 3oue to him by the puttyng to of the hondis of a prest. He comaundide also to Tite, among othere vertues of a bishop, the[g] which he declaride in a short word, that also he lese[h] not the kunnyng of scriptures, "holdynge," he seith, "thilke word, "'the which[i] aftir Goddis lore is a[k] trewe word, "that he be my3ty, to moneste[l] in holsum doc-"tryne, and to withstonde a3enseyeris[m]."

CAP. IV.

Holi forsothe cherlhed to hym silf alone[a] profiteth; and[b] as myche as he edifieth of desert of lijf the chirche of Crist, so myche he noieth if to the destruyers[c] he withstonde not. Malachie the prophete, ȝhe, bi Malachye the Lord, askith prestis the lawe; in so myche the offis of the[d] preste is[e], askid, to answeren 'of the lawe[f]. And in Deutronomy we reden, "aske thi fadre, and "he shal telle thee; thi prestis, and thei shal "seie to thee." In the psalm forsothe the[g] hundryd and eiȝtetene, "thi iustifiyngis were to "me chauntable in the place of my pilgrimage." And in the discripcioun of the riȝtwisman, whan David comparysownede hym to a tree of lijf that is in paradise, among other vertues this he brouȝt forth, "in the lawe of the Lord the wil "of hym, and in his lawe he shal thenk dai and "nyȝt." Daniel in the ende of the most holi visioun seith riȝtwise men to shyne as sterrys, and vndirstonders[h], that is, tauȝt men, as the fermament. Thou seest how myche thei ben atwyn, riȝtwise chirlehede and tauȝt ryȝtwisnesse. Other men to sterres, other men to heuene ben comparisoned; al be it that, aftir the trewthe of Ebrew tung, either may be vndurstondun of lerned men. Thus we reden anentis hem, "thilk[i] "forsothe that weren tauȝt shulen shyne as the "shynyng of the firmament, and thoo[k] that "techen many men to rightwisnes as sterres into "perpetuel[l] eternytees." Whi is Poul seid the vessel of eleccoun? forsothe for the vessel of the lawe, and of holi scripture[m] he was the almery. The Faryseus ben stonyed in the doctryne of the Lord, and wondren[n] in Petre and Joon, how thei kunnen the lawe, sith lettres thei lerneden not[o]. What euer forsothe to[p] other men excersice and ech dai thenkynge in the lawe was wont to ȝyuen, that to hem the Holi Gost tolde, and after that it is[q] writin, "thei "weren Goddis tauȝt men," that is, able men to liȝtli be tauȝt of God. Twelue ȝeer the Saueour hadde[r] fulfillid, and in the temple sittynge, askynge of[s] questiouns of the lawe more techeth,

CAP. IV.

Forsothe hooly homelynesse in byleeue profitith to him silf aloone; and as myche as he edifieth of[n] disseruyng of good lijf the chirche of Crist, so myche he noieth if he withstonde not the distrieres ther of. Malechie the profete, and also the Lord bi Malechie, askith the prestis the lawe; in so myche that the office of the prest is, whanne he is askid, to answere of the lawe of God. And in Deutronomye we reden, "aske thi fadir, and he "shal tell thee; and aske thi prestis, and thei "shulen seie to thee." Also in the hundryd and xviij.° salm Dauith seith, "thi iustifyngis weren "ioyful to[p] me in the place of my pilgrymage." And in the discriuynge of the riȝtwise man, whanne Dauith liknede him to the tre of lijf that is in paradijs, among othere vertues thus he seide, "the "wil of him is in the lawe of the Lord, and he "shal thenke in his lawe day and nyȝt." Danyel in the ende of a ful hooly vysioun seith, that "riȝtwise men shulen shyne as sterris, and wise "lerned men as the firmament." Thou seest how moche riȝt wise homelynesse and wyse riȝtwisnes dyuersen 'bitwene hem silf[q]. The first of hem ben likned to sterris, and the[r] othere to heuene; al be it that, aftir the[r] treuthe of Ebrew tunge, eithir of hem moun be vndurstonde of lerned men. For thus we reden anentis hem, "forsothe thilke that ben wise "lerned men shulen shyne as the bryȝtnesse of the "firmament, and thilke that techen many men to "riȝtwisnesse shulen shyne as sterrus in perpetuel euerlastyngnessis." Whi is Poul the apostle seid the vessel of eleccioun? sothely for he was the vessel of lawe, and the almarie of hooly scriptures. The Farissees ben[s] astonyed, 'or merveilen[t], in the doctrine of the Lord, and wondryden in Petir and Joon, hou they kouden the lawe, sithen thei lerneden no[u] lettris. For the Hooly Goost telde hem al, that euer excercise in studie, and euery dayes thenkyng in the lawe of God, was wont to ȝyue to othere men, as it is writun, "and[w] thei weren dis-"ciplis of God able to be tauȝt[x]." Verreye[z] wisdom shal spil[a] the fals wisdom, and al be it that the foli of prechyng be in the cros, neuerthelater Poul spekith wisdom among perfit men; wisdom forsothe not of this world, the which is destruyed, ne of princes of this world; but he spekith wisdom of God in mysterie hid, that God bifore ordeynede bifore worldis. The wisdom of God Crist is; " Crist forsothe is the vertu of God and the wis- " dom of God." This wisdom is in mysterie hid, and of the[b] which the title of the nynthe salm is bifore notid, " for the hid thingis of the " sone," in the whiche ben alle the[c] tresoures[d] of wisdom and of the[e] kunnyng of God hid; and `he that was in mysterie hid, is[f] bifore ordeyned bifore the worldis; `bifore ordeyned forsothe[g] and bifore figuryd in lawe[h] and prophetis[i]. Wherfore and prophetis[k] weren clepid[l] seers, for thei seien hym, whom other men seien not. " Abraham sawȝ the day of hym, and he was " glad." Heuenes weren openyd to Ezechiel, the which weren closid to the synful puple. " Opene," seith Dauid, " myn eiȝen, and I shal " biholde the merueilis of thi lawe." The lawe forsothe is spiritual[m], and nede it is openynge, that it be vndirstondun, and with opyn face we of the lawe, he techith myche the[b] more while he askith wisely questiouns. But perauenture we seien Petre to be lewide, and Joon to be lewide, of whiche euere eithir myȝte seie, " thouȝ I be vnwiys in " word, netheles not in kunnyng." Joon was a lewde fishere, and[c] vntauȝt in scolys; and fro whennus, I preie, cam that vois, " In the bygynnyng was the[d] " word, and this word was anentis God, and God " was this same word?" This word logos in Grew bitokeneth many thingis, for it is word, and resoun, and noumbre, and cause of euery thing, by the which alle thingis ben, that han beyng; the[e] which ech oon we vndirstonden riȝtfuli in[f] Crist.

CAP. V.

Wise Plato knew not thes thingis; nether Demostenes the faire spekere knew these thingis; for God seith, " I shal spille the wisdom of wise " clerkis[g], and I shal repreue the prudence of pru- " dent men of the world." Verry wisdom shal spille false wisdom, and al be it that the foly of prechyng be holde[h] in the cros, netheles Poul spekith wisdom among parfit men; not wisdom of this world, which is distryed, ne of princes of this world; but he spekith wisdom of God hid in mysterie, that God ordeynede bifore worldis[i]. Crist is the wisdom of God, for " Crist is the vertu of God " and the wisdom of God." This wisdom is in mysterie hid, of which the title of the nynthe salm is bifore[k] notid, " for the hid thingis of the sone " of God," in whom ben alle the tresours of wisdom and of kunnyng of God hid; and he that was in mysterie hid, is bifore ordeyned tofore the worldis; also bifore ordeyned and byfore fygurid in the lawe and profetis. Wherfor the profetis weren clepid seeris, for they saien him, whom othere men saien not. " Abraham say the day of him, and he[l] was " glad[m]." Heuenes weren opened to Ezechiel, the[n] whiche weren closid to the synful peple. Dauyth seith, " Lord, opene thou myn yȝen, and I shal " biholde the meruels of thi lawe." For the lawe is spirituel[o], and therfor it hath nede of[p] open reuelacioun, that it be vndirstonde, that with open face we moun[q] se the glorie of God. CAP. VII.

It is leueful to se, that 'the storie of[t] Genesis 'be ful knowin[u], in the which of the creature[v] of the world, of[w] the[x] bigynnyng of mankynde, of the deuysioun of the erthe, of the confusioun of tungis and of folkis, and of descendyng of the folk of Ebrew vnto Egipt, and vnto the goyng out is writun. Exodus is open with the ten plagis, with the[y] ten hestis, with mystik[z], and with Goddis preceptis. Prest is the book of Leuy, in the which alle sacrifyces, ȝhe, and almost alle silablis, and the clothis of Aron, and the hole ordre of Leuy, enspiren heuenli sacramentis. Numeri forsothe, whether thei conteynen not the 'mysteries of al the[a] hole craft of noumbrarie, and of prophecie[b] of Balaam, and of the two and fourti mansiouns thurȝ wildernes? Deutronomy forsothe the secounde lawe, and the prefiguracoun of the lawe of the euangelie, hath he not so thilk[c] thingis, that ben rather[d], that neuertheles[e] alle thingis ben newe of the olde? Hider to Moyses, 'hider to[f] Pentateuchon, that is, the fyue bokis, with the which fyue wordis the apostle glorieth hym silf wilne[g] to speke in the chirche. Job, the sawmpler[h] of pacience, the which whethir not mysteries with his word knytteth? In proos he bigynneth, in verse he goth forthe, in word a fote, that is, in meke word, he is endid; and he determyneth alle the lawes of dialatik, in proposicoun, assumpcoun[i], confirmacioun, conclusioun. Ech wordis in it ben ful of wittis; and, that I holde my pees of other, the resurreccoun of bodies so profecieth[k], that no man of that, othere more open, or more slyly, myȝt wryte. " I wote," he seith, " that[l] my forbier[m] lyueth, and in the last dai Y spekynge to the sone, seith, " 'mi sone, mi miȝtes, " gret power alone bi riȝtes[i];" and aftir the wordis of our Sauyour in the cros, he writith this verse, " 'such word he felte, thenkinge ficchid ther he " dwelte[k]." These thingis ben childish[l], and liyk to the pley of children pleiynge at the[m] sercle, to teche that thou knowist not; ȝhe, so[n] that I speke with herte[o], it is foly to feyne thee to knowe that thou knowist not.

CAP. VII.

It is to wite, that the storie of Genesis is ful open, in the which it is writen of the makyng of the world, and of the bigynnyng of mankynde, and of dyuysioun of the lond, and of the confusioun of tungis, and of the[p] goyng doun of the folk of Ebrew vnto Egipt. The book of Exodi is open with the ten plages, with the ten heestis, with mystik and goodlich comaundementis. The book of Leuytes is opun, in the which alle sacryfices, ȝhe, and al most alle silablis, and the clothis of Aaron, and the hool ordre of Leuy, shewen heuenly sacramentis. The book of Noumbre, that is next, wher[q] he conteyne not the mysteries of al the hool crafte of noumbre, and of the profecie of Balaam, and of the xlij. dwellyngis[qq] in wildirnesse? Deutronomye forsothe, the secounde lawe and the prefiguracioun of the lawe of the gospel, wher[r] he conteyne not so thilke thingis that ben bifore, that netheles alle thingis ben newe spryngynge of the olde? Thus fer lasten the fyue bookis of Moyses, that me clepith Pentateuchon, with the[s] whiche fyue wordis the apostle ioyeth him silf, that he hath wille to speke hem in the chirche. Job, that is ensaumple of pacience, wher[t] he knyttith not misteries with his word? He bigynneth prose[u], he procedith in vers, and with lowlich word he makith an ende; and he determyneth alle the lawis of the science of art, in proposicioun, in euydence takynge, in confermynge by argument, and in open shewyng bi[w] conclusioun. Ruth Moabites fulfillith the prophecie of Ysaie seiynge, " Lord, sende out the lomb, the lord- " shiper of erthe, fro the stoon of desert to the " mownt of the dow3ter of Syon." Samuel shewith the old lawe don awey in Heli deed, and in the sla3ter of Saul. Forsothe in Sadok and Dauid ben witnessid the sacramentis of the new presthod, and of new[w] empyre. Malachym, that is, the thrid and the ferthe book of Kynges, discryueth the rewme of Juda, and the rewme of Israel, fro Salomon to Jecony, and fro Jeroboam, sone of Nabath, vnto Osee, the which was led into Asyries. If thow biholdist the storye, the wordis ben symple; if in the lettres thow biholdist the preuey witt, the fewnesse of the chirche, and the batails[x] of eretikis a3ens the chirche, ben told. The twelue prophetis, togidre artid[y] into the narewnes[z] of o[ww] volym, myche othere than sowneth in the lettre bifore figuren. In the book of Juges as many princes as ther ben of the puple, so fele figures ther ben. Ruth Moabitis fulfillith the prophesie of Ysaye, seiynge, " Lord, sende out the " lomb, the lordly gouernour of erthe, fro the " stoon of desert to the mounte of the dou3tir of " Syon." Amos, shepherd[b] and cherl, and wel knowynge the beries of busshis, may not be openyd in fewe wordes. Who forsothe worthili[bb] may shew out the thre and foure wickidnessis of Damask, of Gaze, of[c] Tyry, of Ydume, of the sones of Amon, and of Moab, and, in[d] the seuenth[e] and ei3te degre, of Juda and of Israel? This spekith[ee] to the fatt kien, that ben in the mownt of Samarie, and witnessith the more hows and the lesse to fallen. He seeth the maker of the locust, and the Lord stondynge vpon the dawbed wal and the adamauntyn, and the appel croke drawynge tourmentis to synful men, and hunger in the erthe, not hunger of bred, ne thrist of water, but of heryng of[f] the word of God. Abdias, that is as myche to seie as the seruaunt of the Lord, ful thundreth a3ens Edom, and the blodi and erthli[g] brother; also the euermore enemye of the brother Jacob, he smytith with a goostli dart. Jonas, the moost fayre culuer, in his shipbreche bifore figurynge the passioun of the Lord, clepith[h] a3en the world to penaunce, and, vndir name of Nynyue, tellith helthe to Gentils. Micheas of[i] Moraschym, the witheire of Crist, tellith the wastyng of a[k] dow3ter of a priue thef, and he settith bisegyng a3ens hire, for she smote the cheke bone of the iuge of Israel. Naum, coumfortour of the world, blameth the citee of blodis, and after his turnyng awey spekith, "Loo, vpon the hillis the fete of the "euangelisynge and tellynge pees." Abacuc, a strong wristeler and a[l] sharp, stondith vpon his waard, and ficcheth a weie of grees vpon the strengthe, that Crijst in cros[m] he biholde[n], and seie[o], "The glorie of hym coueride[p] heuenes[q], "and[r] of hys preisyng ful is the erthe; his "shynyng shal be as li3t, and hornes in his "hondis, there his strengthe is hid." Sophonyas, the wayter and the knower of the priuetees[s] of yng[r] of the formere puple, he proficiede that the Hooly Goost shulde be held out upon the seruauntis of God, and upon his hondmaydens, that is to seie, upon c. xx. names of newe feithful men, and the sunne schynynge liyk a reyn bowe held out in the comyn eting place of Syon; the whiche hundryd and twenty arysynge by encrees fro oon to fiftene arewe, maken fully the numbre of xv. degrees, which ben conteyned mystily in the Sauter. Amos the profete, that was bothe schepparde and a[s] feeld man, and wel knowynge the beries of the busches, may not be opened in fewe wordis; for who may worthily shewe the thre and the[t] foure wickidnesses of Damask, of Gaze, of[u] Tire, and Ydume[w], and of the sones of Amon, and of Moab, and[x] in the seuenthe and ei3tthe degree of Juda and Irael? 'He this speketh[y] to the fatte kiyn that ben in the mounte of Samarie, and witnesseth that the more hows and the lesse of Samarye shulde falle doun. He byholdith the feynour of the lokuste, and the Lord stondynge upon the teride wal and the adamauntyne, and the appil crook drawynge turmentis to synful men, and hungur in erthe, not hungere of breed, neither thirst of watir, but of heeryng of the word of God. Abdias, that is as myche to seie as the seruaunt of the Lord, thundryth and sowneth a3ens Edom, and a3en the bloodi man, and the[z] erthely brothir; also he smytith with a goostly dart the contynuel enemye of oure brothir Jacob. Jonas, that is, the moost fair culuer, and in his schipbreche byfore fygurynge the passioun of Crist, clepith a3en the world to penaunce, and, vndir the name of Nynyue, he shewith saluacioun to come to hethene men. Michee of Morasty, that was eir of heuene to gideres with Crist, shewith the wastyng of the dou3tir of a pryuy theef, and he sittith bisegyng a3ens hir, for she smot the cheek boon of the iuge of Israel. Naum, comfortour of the world, blameth the citee of bloodis, and aftir the ouerturnyng therof he spekuth thus, "Lo! upon the hillis of "vertu ben the feet of him that prechith the gos-"pel, and shewith pees to the puple." Abacuk, the strong wrastelere and my3ty, stondith stifly upon his warde, and he settith faste his step[a] vpon subuertynge, with a clere sermoun. Dauid, oure Symphonydes, Pyndarie, and Alcheus[q], Flaccus, and Catullus, and Serenus, precheth Crist with the harp, and in the ten 'cordid sawtri[r] arereth[s] vp the ariser[t] fro[u] helle[v]. Salomon, the pesible and the ful loued of the Lord, mendith maneres, techith kynde, ioyneth Crist and the chirche, and the swete bryde song singith of the holi brydalis. Hester, in[w] figure of the chirche, delyuerith the puple fro peril, and, Aman, that[x] is as myche to sey as wyckidnes, slawn, she sendith partis of the feest, and a solempne day into the after geten. Perlipomynon, that is, the book of the olde instrument, recapitulatour, word bregger[y], is suche and so myche, that who so euere with outen it wole[z] prowdli take to hym kunnynge of scriptures, scorne he hym silf; forsothe be alle names 'o rewe[a], and ioynters of wordis, outlaft[b] stories in the boke of Kyngis ben towched, and questiouns vnnoumbrable of the euaungelye ben maad open. Esdras and Neemy, helper, that is to sey, and coumfortour fro the Lord, ben artyd[c] in o volume, enstoren the temple, the walles of the citee maken out, and al that[d] congregacoun of the puple a3engoynge into her cuntre, and the discripcoun of prestis, of deknes, of Israel, and of men takun fro hethenes to the ryte of Jewis, and the deuydid werkis of walles and of toures bi singuler meynes, bryngen forth other thyng in the rynde, and in[e] the mergh other thing withholden. Seest thow me for the loue of scripturys rauyshid to haue passid the maner of a pistle, and 3it not haue fillid[f] that I wolde? We han herd oonlich, what we mowe know, what coueyten, and forsothe that we mowe sey, "my "soule coueytide to desire thi justyfyyngis in al "tyme." Forthermore that of Socrates is fulfyllid in vs, "this oonli Y knowe[g] that Y knowe "not." I shal towche and shortly the newe testament. Mathew, Mark, Luke, and Joon, the foure hors plowes[h] of the Lord, and the verrey cherubyn, that is to sey, plente of kunnyng, thoru3 out al the bodi ben i3ed, sparklis shynen out, li3tes hidir and thidir rennen, han ri3t feet and streychynge into hei3e[i], rigges fethered, and haselne 3erd, and of a pot set afire fro the face of the north, and of the libard ispoilid of his colours, and he knyttith the iiij. maner abece in dyuerse metris. The thridde hath bygynnyng[n] and ende wlappid with so many derknessis that, as anentis Ebrews[o], thilke parties with the bigynnyng of Genesis shulde not be rad bifore[p] thritty wyntir. The fourth forsothe, which is the laste among the foure profetis, and a knowere of tymes, and a louere of stories of the world, schewith with[q] cleer word, that ther shulde be a stoon korue out of an hil without mannis hondis, turnynge upsedoun alle the rewmes of the world; and that stoon is Crist, born of a mayde without medlyng of man, that turnede bothe[r] hethen men and Jewis to the bileeue. Dauith, the sownere of symphonie, 'Pyndarie, and Alcheus, Flaccus, and Catullus, and Serenus[s], prechith Crist with an[t] harpe, and in a sautre of ten cordis he reisith him up fro hellis[u], that roos fro deth to liyf. Salamon, the pesible and the amyable child of the Lord, amendith maneris, and techith kynde, and ioyneth Crist and hooly chirche to gideres, and syngith the sweete bryddis song of hooly brydalis. Hester, in figure of hooly chirche, delyuerith the puple fro perel, and whanne Aman, that is as myche to seie as wickidnesse, was slayn, she sendith partis of the feeste aboute, and ordeyneth a solempne day to hem that shulden be bore aftirward. Paralipomenon, that is, the book of the olde instrument[v], rehersour of chapitres bifore seid, and breggere of wordus[w], is sich and so myche worth, that whoso euere 'withouten it[x] wole proudly take to him kunnyng of scripturis, he may worthily scorne him silf; for sikirly this book berith greet misterie bi alle the names therof and ioynyngis of wordis, and the stories that ben lefte vnwriten in the bookis of Kyngis, ben touchid in this, and also questiouns of the gospel ben opened[y] in it withouten noumbre. Esdras, and Neemye his helpere, that is to seie, a comfortour sent fro the Lord, ben conteyned in o volym; thei restoren the temple, and maken up the wallis of the citee, and also al the congregacioun of the puple that turnede a3en in to her cuntre, and the discryuyng of prestis and holden hem togidre ouer al fleynge, and to hem siluen ben thur3 out pleitid, and as a wheel with yune a wheel ben turned, and gon whidre euer the breeth of the Holi Goost hem perfitly ledith. Poul the apostle writith to seuene chirches; the ei3t forsothe to Ebrewis[k] of summe men out of the[l] noumbre is put. Tymothe he enfourmeth, and Tite; Philomon he preieth for the seruaunt fugitife, vpon the whiche I wene beter to be stil, than to few thingis write. The Actes of the[l] Apostlis forsothe nakid[m] storye semen to sownen, and to weuen the childhod of the waxynge chirche; and for[n] we knowen the wryter of hem Luke to ben a phisisian, whos preysyng is in the euangelie, we taken hede there with alle his wordis to ben medecyn of the langwissynge soule. James, Petre, Joon, Jude[o], seuene epistlis maden as wel mistik[p] as[q] redi, and short togidre, and long; short in wordis, long in sentencis, that he be seldom, that not wexeth[r] blynd in the redyng of hem. The Apocalips of Joon so fele hath sacramentis, how fele wordis. Litle Y haue seid, and for the desert of the volym, al the preysyng is the lower; in euery[s] wordis manyfold vnderstondyngis sitten hid. I prey thee, dere brother, among these thingis to lyuen, these thingis to thenken, noon othre thingis[t] to knowun, and no thing ellis to sechen. Semeth it not to thee now here in erthis a dwellyng place of[u] heuenli kyngdom? I wole[v] not, that thou be offendid in holi scripturis thur3 symplenes, and as thur3 foulnes of wordis, the whiche, or[w] thur3 the vice of the[x] vndoers, or of verrey purpose, ben so spokun, that the li3tloker thei my3ten enfourme a[y] churlishe[z] cumpany; and that[a] in oon and the[b] same sentence other wise the tau3t, othre wise the vntau3t my3ten fele. I am not so lustsum and dul, that I shulde bihote thes thingis me to know, and the fruytis of hem to gadere[bb] in the erthe, whos rotis ben ficchid[c] in heuene; but I knowelech to wiln, but I professe me to enforse, I profer me to the sitter; forsakynge mayster[d] Y[e] bihote a leder, "to "the asker me 3yueth, to the knocker me openeth, "the seker fyndith;" lerne we in erthis whos kundekenes of Israel and of men newe turned fro hethenesse to the rite of Jewis, and the dyuerse werkis of wallis and of toures bi alle the meynees, beren o thing in the rynde bitokened bi the lettre, and an othere thing they conteynen withinne in the mary of gostly vndurstondyng. Thou[z] seest wel that I haue passid the maner of epistil, for I am rauyshid with loue[a] of scriptures, and 3it I haue not fulfillid that I wolde; netheles we han herd what we moun knowe and desire, that we moun seie also, "my soule hath coueytid to desire "thy iustyfyingis in al tyme," and al so thilke prouerbe of Socrates is fulfillid in us, that seith thus, "I knowe oneliche this thing, that I knowe "no thing fully."

CAP. VIII.

I shal touche the newe testament, 'and that[b] shortly; as Matheu, Mark, Luyk, and Joon, that ben the foure whelid cart of the Lord, and the veri cherubyn, that is to seie, plentee of kunnyng; they ben ful of i3en thorou3 al the body, sparcles shynen out fro hem, leitis rennen hidur and thidur, thei han euene streig3t feet and strecchyng an hi3, and backes fetherid, and holden hem togideres ouer al fleynge, and they ben faste plettid ech to othere, and they ben turned as o wheele with ynne an othere wheele, and goon whidur euere the Hooly Goost ledith hem. Poul the[c] apostle writith to seuene chirches, for the viij. epistle that he wroot to Ebreus is put of sum men out of the noumbre. Also he enformeth Tymothe and Tite; and he preieth Filomone for the seruaunt that fley awey, upon the whiche I weene it is betere to be stille than to write a fewe thingis. Also the Actus of Apostles semen to sowne nakid storie, and to conteyne the childhood of the wexyng chirche; but for we knowen that the writere of hem was Luyk, that was a ficisien, whose[d] preisyng is in the gospel, we taken heede therfor that alle his wordis ben medycyn of the morenyng soule. James, Petre, Joon, and Judee, maden seuene epistlis, as wel goostly and mystik as compendiouse; they ben bothe schorte in[e] wordes and longe in sentences, so that selden it is, that sum man ne waxith blynde

CAP. VIII.

Thou hast here the moost louyd brother of thee Eusebi, the which dowblid to me the grace of thi lettres[h], tellynge the honestee of thi maners, the dispisyng of the world, the feith of frenship, the loue of Crist; for prudence and fayrnes of speche also with outen hym thilke[i] epistle tolde bifore. Hye, Y preye thee, and the corde of the boot dwellynge in the see rather kut of, than vnbynd; no man to renounse the world, wel may selle thingis that he hath dispisid for to selle. What euer into thi costagis of thin thow takest, cownte it for wynnyng; in in the redyng of hem. The Apocalyps of Joon hath as feele sacramentis, as he hath wordis. Litil I haue seyd, and for the worthynesse of the volym al the preisyng is the lowere; in alle the wordis many manere vndirstondyngis ben hid. I preie thee, dere brother, that thou lyue among these thingis, and to thenke on these thingis, and noon othere science to knowe, ne noon othir science[f] to seche. Semeth it not now[g] to thee, whyle thou art here 'in erthes[h]', to be a dwellynge place in heuenly kyngdom? I wole[i] not that thou be offendid in hooly scriptures thorouȝ symplenesse, and as thorouȝ foulnesse of wordis, the[k] whiche thorouȝ the vice of expowneris[l], either of verry purpos, ben so[m] spoken, that thei myȝten the liȝtlyere enforme the lewid puple, and that the lerned man myȝte feele in o wise in the same sentence, and the vnlerned in an other maner. I am neither so lusty, ne so dul, that I shulde bihote me to knowe these thingis, to[n] gadere the fruytis of hem on erthe, whose rootis ben fastned in heuene; but I knowlech to[o] wilne, and enforse me[p], and profre me as a disciple to him that sittith in chayre; forsakynge me to be a mastir, I bihote me to be a felowe in lernyng; for "to the askere me ȝyueth, and to the "knockere me openeth, and he that sekith fynd-"ith;" lerne we on erthe siche thingis, whose kunnyng dwellith[q] to us in heuene. I shal atake[r] thee with hondis metynge togideres, and that I helde out sum what vncouenably that be[s] of the bolnyng of Ermagore, I shal enforse to[t] kunne al that thou shuldist seke.

CAP. IX.

I haue takun desired epistlis of my man Desiderie, the which, thurȝ a maner bifore kunnynge of thingis that ben to com, with Danyel is fallun the name of hym, preiynge, that I shulde take to[r] the erys of ourne the fyue bokis of Moyses translatid fro Ebrewe speche into[s] Latyn tung. Certeyn a perylous werk, open to the berkyngis of backbyters, that seyn[t] me to[u] forgen new thingis for olde into the stranglyng of the seuenti interpretours, so wit as wyn prouing; sith Y ful oft haue witnessid me to offre in the tabernacle of God for a liȝt[v] porcoun thingis that I may, ne[w] the[x] richessis[y] of an othre man to be defowlid with the porenes of othre. The which thing that I shulde dore don[z], me styryde the studie of Orygen, the which to olde translacioun mengide the translacoun of Theodocioun, with astericho, that is, with the signe of a 'sterre[a], whan he makith clere the thingis that weren to it for wynnyng; for it is an old sothsawe, to the auarouse man as wel lackith the[w] good that he hath, as that he hath not; and to him that bileueth as he shulde, al the world is of his rychese[x], but the vnfeythful man hath euere nede, ȝhe, to an halpeny. Therfor lyue we in siche maner, as hauynge no thing and weldyng alle thinges; liflode and clothing ben richessis of[y] cristen men. If thou hast thin owne good in thi power, selle it; if thou hast not, cast awey and lett it go; for Crist seith, thi[z] mantil is to be lefte to him that berith awey thi[a] coote. But if it be so that thou puttynge ouer euermore fro morewe to morewe, and tariynge fro day to day, sliȝlich and foot by foot thou selle thi litil possessiouns, hath not Crist, trowist thou, wher of he may feede his pore folk? He that hath offrid him silf, hath ȝoue al his good to God. The apostlis forsoken onely the boot and the nettis; the widowe putte two minutis in to the treserie of God, and it is put in worship bifore the richesse of gold. Liȝtly he dispisith alle worldly goodis, that thenkith euere more in him silf that he shal die.

'Preface of Seint Jerom[b].

I haue take the[c] epistlis myche desirid of my man Desiderye, the whiche, with a maner profecie of thingis to come, vside the name of an hooly bisechere[d] with Danyel the profete, preiynge, that I wolde take to the eeris of ȝoure frendis the fyue bookis of Moyses translatid fro Ebrew speche into Latyn tunge. Certenly this is a perelouse werk, and opene to the berkyngis[e] of bacbiteris, that seyn, that I forge new thingis for olde in to the hindryng of the seuenty interpretours, and they ben preuyng wit as wyn; sithen I ful ofte haue witnessid me[f] to offre in the tabernacle of God for my symple porcioun siche thingis as I may, not wilnynge the richesse of o man to be defoulid with the pouert of othere men. The which thing for I shulde be hardy to do, the studie of Orygen stiryde me therto, the which medlide the translacioun of Theodosyon to the olde translacioun, merkynge al his werk with the signe of a sterre and with the litle, and with obelo, that is, with signe[b] of an arow, whan he any wast thing[c] distroieth and scrapith awey, al his werk markynge[d]; and moost tho[e] thingis the whiche the autoryte of the apostlis and of the euangelistis openyde; in the which many thingis we reden of the olde testament, the[f] whiche ben not had in oure bokis; as is that, "fro Egipt I clepid[g] my sone;" and, "for he[h] shal be clepid[i] Nazare;" and, "men "shal[k] seen, in whom thei han pungid;" and, "flodis shal[l] flowe of his womb quyk watres;" and, "thingis[m] that nether eiȝe seiȝ, ne eere "herde, ne in to the herte of man stiede, that "God greithid to hem that hym louen;" and many othre thingis, the whiche desyren propre ordre. Aske we[n] thanne[o] hem, where thes thingis ben wrytun; and whanne thei mown[p] not seye, of the bokis of Ebrewe brynge we forthe. The first witnes is in Osee, the secounde in Ysaye, the thrid in Zacharye, the ferthe in Prouerbis, the fifte as wel in Ysaye; the whiche many men vnknowynge folwen the deceyuyngis of scripturys, whos autor is vnknowun, and setten bifore, Spanyshe songes vpon deed men, or of noresses vpon ther children, autentik bokis. The cause[q] of the errour is not myn to expown. Jewis seyn, that it is don with wise counsel, lest[r] Ptholome herier of o God, also as anentis the Ebrewis shulde of take dowble Godhede; the whiche moost therfor thei diden, for he was knowen[s] to falle into the techyng of Plato. Wherfore wher euere holi wrytt witnessith ony holi thing of the Fadre, and the Sone, and the Holy Goost, or[t] othre wyse thei vndiden, or algatis helden ther pees, that thei myȝten do aseth to the kyng, and that thei opened not the priuete of the bilene. And I not who, the first auctour, thurȝ his lesyng maad out seuenti sellis at Alysawndre, in the whiche thei deuydide the same thingis[u] shulde wryte; sith[v] Aresteus, of the same Ptholome chefe counseylour, and keper of bokis, and myche tyme aftir Josaphus, not[w] suche thinge tolden, but wryten hem, gadrid to signe of an arowe; whanne he made ony scripturis more clereli to[g] shyne that weren bifore lesse cleer, there he made the sygne of a sterre; and whanne he scrapide or raside awey ony waast writyng, he made the sygne of an arowe; and moost in thoo[h] thingis 'the whiche auctoryte[i] of the euangelistis and of the apostlis openyden; in the[k] which we reden many thingis of the olde testament, that ben not had[l] in oure bookis; as is that auctorite, "from Egipt I clepide my sone;" and, "for he "shal be clepid a Nazarey;" and, "men shulen se, "in whom they han thorouȝ persid;" and, "floodis "of water of liyf shulen flowe of his wombe;" and, "thingis that neithire iȝe saw, nether eere herde, "neither styede in to[m] the herte of man, that God "hath ordeyned redy for hem that louen him;" and many othere thingis that[n] ben, that desyren her propur ordire. Axe we thanne hem, where these thingis ben writun; and sithen they moun not seie hem, of the bookis of Ebrew brynge we hem forth. The firste witnesse is in Oose, the secounde in Ysaie, the thrydde in Zacharye, the fourthe in Prouerbis, the fyuethe also in Ysaye; the which thing many men vnknowynge folowen the errours of siche scripturis that ben with out auctorite, and they[o] setten her 'veyn taalis[p] in more worship than autentik bookis. It is not in my power to expowne the causis of errour. Jewis seyn, that it was doon with[q] wise counsel, leste Ptolome, worshipere of oo God, shulde haue vndurstonde double Godhed anentis[r] Ebrews; which thing thei dide moost for this cause, for he was knowe to falle to the lore of Plato. Wherfor where euere hooly writ witnessith ony hooly thing of the Fadir, and the Sone, and of[s] the Hooly Goost, or ellis they expowneden it in othere maner, or algatis helde her pees, that they myȝte aquyte hem to the kyng, and that they openyden not the priuyte of the byleeue. And the firste auctour her of, I woot neuere who, thorouȝ his lesyng made seuenty sellis at Alysaundre, in the[t] whiche they, departid[u] at twynne, shulden write; sith Aristeus, that was cheef councelour of the same Ptolome and kepere of his bookis, and gider in o[x] chirche, to han spokin togider, and not to haue prophecied. It is another to be a prophet, and an other to ben an vndoer of langage; there the spiryt seith bifore thingis that ben to comen, here teching and plente of wordis, thingis that he vndurstondith translateth. But perauenture Tullyus is to be wenyd enblowid with the spirit of retorik, to haue translatid the boke that is seid Economyk of Zenofontes, and the boke that is seid the[y] Pictagore of Plato, and the boke that is seid Prothesifontes of Demostynes; other the Holi Gost wenyde witnessis of the same bokis othre wise bi the seuenti vndoers of tungis, othre wise bi the apostlis, that that[z] thei helden ther pees, thes han liȝid to ben writun. What thanne? dampne we the olde? nay, but after the studies[a] of the rather[b] men, in the hous of the Lord we traueilen that that[c] we may. Thei han[d] undon scripturis before the coming of Crist; and that that[e] thei wisten not, thei han spokin with doutous sentence[f]; we after the passioun and the resurreccoun of hym not oonli profesie, but storye wrytun. Othre weys forsothe thingis seen, other wise thingis herd ben told; that we beter vndirstonden, beter we tellen. Here than, thou enemye, herkyn, thow backbiter; I dampe not, I reprehende not the seuenti, but trustily I putte bifore the apostlis to alle tho[g]; bi the mowthe of these to me Crist sowneth, whom before the prophetis amonge spiritual ȝiftis Y rede sett, amonge the[h] which the vndoers of tungis holden fulli the last degre. Wherto art thou tourmentid with enuy? what[i] sterist thow vnwise mennus willis aȝens me? if where Y seme to thee erre[k] in the[l] translating, aske the Ebrewis, conseil the maystrys of dyuerse citees; that thei han of Crist, thi bokis han not. It is another, if the witnessis vsurped of the apostlis after proueden aȝen hem seluen, and the Latyn saumplers[m] ben more amendid than Grekis, Grekis than Ebrews. But thes aȝenus the enuyows. Now, ful dere Desidery, I preye thee, for that[n] thou hast maad me to vndergon so greet werk[o], and to take the bigynnyng of Genesis, myche tyme aftir Josophus, tellen[x] no[y] sich thing, but they writen, whanne thei weren gaderid to gideris in to[z] a chirche, hem to haue talkid to gideres, and not to haue profecied. For it is oon to be a profete, and an othire to be a translatour of langage[a]; for in profecie the spirit seith bifore siche thingis that ben to come, but in translacioun, enformacioun and plentee of wordis, translatith siche thingis as he vndirstondith. But parauenture Tullius is to be trowid to be blowen with the spirit of retorik, and to haue translatid the book that is seyd Yconomyk of Zenofontes, and the book that is seyd Pictagore of Plato, and the book that is seid Prothesifontis of Demostenes; or ellis the Hooly Goost shewide witnessis of the same bookis in o wise by the seuenty interpretours of langagis, and in an othere manere by the postlis, that that[b] thing that they han holde stille, othere men 'han lied to be writen. What thanne? dampne we the olde? nay, but aftir the studies of othere men that weren bifore[c] us, what that[d] we may, we traueylen in the hous of the Lord. Thei han translatid scriptures bifore the comyng of Crist; they[e] han spoken with douteful[f] sentences, that they knewen not[g]; but we, aftir the passioun and the resurreccoun of him, not onely writen profecie, but open storie. For thingis seyn ben telde in o maner, and thingis herd ben teld in an other maner; for the bettere that we vndurstonden a thing, the bettere we tellen it. Therfor here, thou enemye, and herkene, thou bacbitere; I dampne not the[h] seuenty interpretours, but tristylich I putte the[i] apostlys tofore[j] alle hem in autorite; for bi the mouth of thes apostlis Crist sownede[k] openli to me; the[l] whiche apostlis I rede to be set bifore the profetis among goostly ȝyftis, among whom the interpretours of[m] langagis holden fully the laste degree. Wher to art thou turmentid with enuye? what stirist thou vnwise mennus willes aȝens me? if I be seyn in ony place to erre in translatynge of hooly writ, aske the Ebrews, counceil maistris of dyuerse citees; that thei[n] han of Crist, thi bookes han not. It is an othere, if the witnessis vsurpid of the apostlis preuyd aftirward aȝenus hem silf, and the

CAP. VIII.

1 The Lord forsothe recordide of Noe, and of alle hauynge soulis, and of alle iumentis[l], that weren with hym in the arke; and he brou3te to a spirit vpon the erthe.
2 And the watris ben lessid, and the wellys of the see and the[m] goterys of heuene ben closid, and reynes fro heuene ben for-3 fendid. And the wateres fro the erthe ben turned a3en, goynge and a3en goynge; and thei bigunnen to be maad lesse after 4 an hundrid and fifty daies. And the arke restide the seuenthe moneth, the seuene and twentith day of the moneth, vpon 5 the mowntis of Armonye. And forsothe the watres 3eden and decreesseden vnto the[n] tenthe moneth, the tenthe forsothe moneth, the firste day of the moneth, 6 aperyden the coppis of the hillis. And whan fourti dayes weren passid, Noe, openynge the wyndow of his arke the 7 which he made, sente out a crow, the which 3ede out, and turnede not a3en to the tyme that watris vpon the erthe weren the face of erthe[l]. Forsothe the schip was borun on the watris. And the watris 19 hadden maistrie[m] greetli on erthe, and alle hi3e hillis vndur alle heuene weren hilid;
the watyr was hi3ere bi fiftene cubitis ouer 20
the hilis whiche it hilide. And ech fleisch 21 was wastid that was moued on erthe, of briddis, of lyuynge beestis, of vnresonable beestis, and of alle `reptilis that crepen[n] on erthe. Alle men, and alle thingis in whiche 22 the brething of lijf was in erthe, weren deed. And God dide awei al substaunce[o] 23 that was on erthe, fro man til to beeste, as wel a crepynge beeste as the briddis of heuene; and tho weren doon awei fro erthe. Forsothe Noe dwellide aloone, and thei that weren with hym in the schip.
And the watris of the greet[p] flood ouere- 24
3eden the erthe an hundrid and fifti daies.

CAP. VIII.

Forsothe the Lord hadde mynde of[q] Noe, 1 and of alle lyuynge beestis, and of alle werk beestis, that weren with hym in the schip; and brou3te a wynd on the erthe.
And watris weren decreessid[r], and the 2 wellis of the see weren closid, and the[s] wyndowis of heuene weren closid, and reynes of heuene weren ceessid. And wa- 3 trys turneden a3en fro erthe[t], and 3eden a3en, and bigunnen to be decreessid[u] aftir

25 Heber. And there ben born to Heber two sonys, name to the toon Phalig, there thur3 that in the daies of him the erthe is dyuydid; and the name of his brother 26 Jactan. The which Jactan gat Elmodad, 27 and Saleth, and Sarmoth, Jare, and Ad-
28 huram, and Vzal, and Deda, and Ebel, 29 and Abumael, Saba and Ophir, and Euila, and Jobab; alle thes the sonys of Jactan.
30 And the abitacioun of hem is maad o Messa, as men goon vnto Sephar, the est
31 hille. Thes the sones of Sem, after cognaciouns, and tungis, and regiouns, in her 32 folkis. Thes the meynes of Noe, aftir puplis and her naciouns; of thes ben dyuydid the gentilis aftir the flood in the erthe.

CAP. XI.

1 Forsothe the erthe was of oo lip, and
2 of the same wordis. And whan men shulden go fro the est, thei founden a feeld in the lond of Sennaer, and thei
3 dwelleden in it. And the tother seide to his nei3bore, Cometh, and make we tile stoons, and sethe we hem with fier; and thei hadden tiles for stoons, and tow3 rites, and Amathei; and puplis of Chananeis weren sowun abrood bi these men.

And the termes of Chanaan weren maad 19 to men comynge fro Sidon to Gerara, til to Gasa, til thou entre in to Sodom and Gomore, and Adama, and Seboyne, til to Lesa. These weren the sones of Cham, 20 in her kynredis, and langagis, and generaciouns, and londis, and folkis. Also of 21 Sem weren borun the fadris of alle the sones of Heber, and Japhet was the more[x] brother. The sones of Sem weren Elam, 22 and Assur, and Arfaxath, and Lud, and Aram. The sones of Aram weren Vs, and 23 Hul, and Gether, and Mes. And sotheli 24
Arfaxath gendride Sale, of whom Heber was borun. And twei sones weren borun 25 to Heber, the name to o[y] sone was Faleg, for the lond was departid in hise daies; and the name of his brothir was Jectan.
And thilke Jectan gendride[z] Elmodad, and 26
Salech, and Asamoth, Jare, and Adhuram, 27 and Vsal, and Deda, and Ebal, and Aby- 28
mahel, Saba, and Ofir, and Euila, and Jo- 29 bab; alle these weren the sones of Jectan.
And the habitacioun of hem was maad fro 30
Messa, as 'me goith[a] til to Sefar, an hil of the eest. These ben the sones of Sem, bi 31 kynredis, and langagis, and cuntrees, in her folkis. These ben[b] the meynees of 32
Noe, bi her puplis and naciouns; folkis in erthe weren departid of these aftir the greet flood.

CAP. XI.

Forsothe the lond was of o langage[c], 1

sothe the generaciouns of Thare. Thare gat Abram, Nachor, and Aran. Aran 28 forsothe gat Loth; and Aran was deed bifore Thare, his fadre, in the lond of his 29 birthe, in Vr of Caldeis. Abram for-sothe and Nachor token hem wyues; the name of the wijf of Abram, Sarai, and the name of the wijf of Nachor, Melcha, the dou3ter of Aron, fadir[k] of Melche 30 and[l] fadir of Jesse. Saray forsothe was 31 bareyn, and had no fre children. And also Thare toke Abram, his sone, and Loth, the sone of Aran, the sone of hys sone, and Saray, his sonys[m] wijf, the wijf of Abraam, his sone, and he ledde hem out fro Vr of Caldeis, that thei my3ten go into the lond of Chanaan; and thei comen vnto Aran, and dwelliden there.
32 And the daies of Thare ben maad of two hundrid and fyue 3eer, and deed he is in Aran.

CAP. XII.

1 The Lord forsothe seide to Abram, Go out fro thi lond, and fro thi kynreden, and fro the hows of thi fadir, and com in 2 to the lond that I shal shew to thee; and I shal make thee in to a greet folk of kynde, and I shal blis to thee, and I shal magnyfie thi name, and thow shalt be 3 blissid; and[n] I shal blis to thoo[o] that blissen thee, and I shal curse to thoo[o] that cursen thee; and in thee shal be 4 blissyd alle cosynages of the erthe. And so Abraam 3ede out, as the Lord comaundide to[p] hym, and Loth 3ede with hym. Of seuenti and fyue 3eers was Abram whan he shulde go fro Aran.
5 And he toke Saray, his wijf, and Loth, the sone of his brother, and al the subtris. Forsothe Nachor lyuede nyne and 24 twenti 3eer, and gendride Thare; and Na- 25

chor lyuede after that he gendride Thare an hundrid and nynetene 3eer, and gen-dride sones and dou3tris. And Thare 26 lyuede seuenti[u] 3eer, and gendride Abram, and[v] Nachor, and Aran. Sotheli these ben 27
the generaciouns of Thare. Thare gen-dride Abram, Nachor, and Aran. For-sothe Aran gendride Loth; and Aran diede 28 bifore Thare, his fadir, in the lond of his natiuite, in Vr of Caldeis. Forsothe Abram 29 and Nachor weddiden wyues; the name of the wijf of Abram was Saray, and the name of the wiif of Nachor was Melcha, the dou3ter of Aran, fadir of Melcha and fadir of Jescha. Sotheli Saray was ba- 30 reyn, and hadde no children. And so 31
Thare took Abram, his sone, and Loth, the sone of Aran his sone, and Saray, his dou3ter in lawe, the wijf of Abram, his sone, and ledde hem out of Vr of Caldeis, that thei schulen go in to the lond of Chanaan; and thei camen 'til to[w] Aran, and dwelliden[x] there. And the daies of Thare 32 weren maad two hundrid 3eer and fyue, and he was deed in Aran.

CAP. XII.

Forsothe the Lord seide to Abram, Go 1

11 in the lond. And whan he was nyȝe that he shulde go into Egipt, he seide to Saray, his wiif, I knew that a fayr wo-
12 man thow art, and that whan Egipciens shulen se thee, thei ben to seyn, the wijf of hym she is, and thei shal slee 13 me, and thee thei shal reserue[w]. Seie thanne, I preye thee, that thow art my sistre, that it be to me wel for thee, and 14 my sowle lyue for the grace of thee. And so whan Abram was gon into Egipt, Egipciens sawen the woman that she was 15 ful fayre; and the princis tolden to Pharao, and preyseden hir anentys hym; and the woman was takun into the hows of 16 Pharao. Abram forsothe thei wel vseden for hir; and there weren to hym sheep, and oxen, and he assis, and seruauntis, and meynes, and she assis, and camelis.
17 The Lord forsothe scourgide Pharao with moost plagis[x] and the hows of hym, for 18 Saray, Abrams[y] wijf. And Pharao clepide in possessioun, and the men whiche thei hadden bigete in Aran; and thei ȝeden out that thei 'schulen go[a] in to the loond of Chanaan. And whanne they camen in to it, Abram passide thorou the lond til to 6 the place of Sichem, and til to the noble valey. Forsothe Chananei was thanne in the lond. Sotheli the Lord apperide to 7 Abram, and seide to hym, Y schal ȝyue this lond to thi seed. And Abram bildide[b] there an auter to the Lord, that apperide to hym. And fro thennus he passide forth 8 to[c] the hil Bethel, that was aȝens the eest, and settide[d] there his tabernacle, hauynge Bethel fro the west, and Hay fro the eest. And[e] he bildide also there an auter to the Lord, and inwardli clepide his name. And Abram ȝede goynge and goynge forth 9 ouer to the south. Sotheli hungur was 10 maad in the lond; and Abram ȝede doun in to Egipt, to be a pilgrime ther, for hungur hadde maistrie[f] in the lond. And 11

whanne he was nyȝ to entre in to[g] Egipt, he seide to Saray, his wijf, Y knowe that thou art a fair womman, and that whanne 12 Egipcians schulen se thee, thei schulen seie, it is his wijf, and thei schulen sle me, and 'schulen reserue thee[h]. Therfor, Y bi- 13 seche thee, seie thou[i], that thou art my sistir, that it be wel to me for thee, and that my lijf lyue for loue[k] of thee. And 14 so whanne Abram hadde[l] entrid in to Egipt, Egipcians sien the womman that sche was ful fair; and the prynces telden to Farao, and preiseden hir anentis him; and the 15 womman was takun vp in to the hous of Farao. Forsothe thei vsiden wel Abram 16 for hir; and scheep, and oxun, and assis, and seruauntis, and seruauntessis, and sche assis, and camels weren to hym. Forsothe 17 the Lord beet Farao and his hous with moste veniaunces, for Saray, the wijf of Abram. And Farao clepide Abram, and 18
seide to hym, What is it that thou hast do to me? whi schewidist thou not to me, that sche was thi wijf? for what cause 19

CAP. XIII.

1 Abram thanne ascendide fro Egipt, he, and his wiif and al that he had, and 2 Loth with hym, to the sowth plaag. He was forsothe ful[b] riche in possessioun of 3 siluer and of gold. And he was turnyd a3en bi the weye that he come fro the sowth in Betel, vnto the place in the which biforhond he had ficchid[c] a tabernacle, bytwix Betel and Hay, in the place
4 of the auter that he made bifore, and he inwardli clepide there the name of the 5 Lord. But and of Loth, the which was with Abram, weren flockis of sheep, and 6 droues, and tabernaclis; and the lond my3te not reseyue hem, that thei dwelliden to giderys; forsothe the substaunce of hem was myche, and thei my3ten not
7 dwel comounli. Wherfor and there was strijf maad bitwix the shepherdis of the flockis of Abram and of Loth. That forsothe tyme Chananeus and Fereseus
8 dwelliden in that lond. Seide thanne Abram to Loth, I biseche, be there not strijf bitwix thee and me, and bitwix my sheepherdis and thi sheepherdis; bri-
9 theren forsothe we ben. Se! al the lond is bifore thee, I preye, go awey fro me; if thow to the left side gost, Y shal hold the ri3t side; if thow the ri3t side 10 chesist, Y shal go to the left[d]. And so Loth, his eyen heued vp, sawe al the regioun abowt of Jordan, the which al was watered, bifore the Lord shulde ouerturne Sodom and Gomor, as paradis of seidist thou, that sche was thi sister, that Y schulde take hir in[m] to wife to me? Now therfor lo! thi wiif; take thou hir, and go. And Farao comaundide to men on 20 Abram, and thei[n] ledden forth hym, and his wijf, and alle thingis that he hadde.

CAP. XIII.

Therfore Abram stiede fro Egipt, he,
1 and his wijf, and alle thingis that he hadde; and Loth stiede with hym, to the south coost. Forsothe he was ful riche in pos-
2 sessyoun of siluer and of gold. And he
3 turnede a3en bi the weye in which he cam fro the south in to Bethel, 'til to[o] the place, in which bifore he hadde sett tabernacle[p], bitwixe Bethel and Hay, in the 4 place of the auter which he made bifore, and inwardli clepide[q] there[r] the name of the[s] Lord. But also flockis of scheep, and 5 droues of oxun, and tabernaclis weren to Loth, that was with Abram; and the lond
6 mi3te not take hem, that thei schulden dwelle togidre, for the catel of hem was myche, and thei mi3ten not dwelle in comyn. Wherfor also strijf was maad bi-
7 twixe the keperis of flockis of Abram and of[t] Loth. Forsothe Chananei and Feresei dwelliden in that lond in that tyme. Ther-
8 for Abram seide to Loth, Y biseche[u], that no strijf be bitwixe me and thee, and bitwixe my scheepherdis and thi scheepherdis; for we ben britheren. Lo! al the 9 lond is bifore thee, Y biseche, departe thou fro me; if thou go[v] to the left side, Y schal holde the ri3t side; if thou chese[w] the ri3t side, Y schal go to the left side. And 10 so Loth reiside hise i3en, and sei3 aboute al the cuntrei of Jordan, which was al moistid, bifor that the Lord distriede Sodom and Gomorre, as paradis of the Lord, and as Egipt, as men comen in to Segor.

So thes thingis past ouer, the word of the[g] Lord was maad to Abram bi a visioun, seiynge, Abram, wolt[h] thow not dreed, I am thi defendour, and thi meed is ful greet. And Abram seide, Lord God, what shal thow ȝyue me? I shal go withouten fre children, and the sone of the proctour of myn hows, this Damask of Elyzar, shal be myn eyre. And Abram addide, To me forsothe thow hast not ȝouun seed, and, lo! the seruaunt of myn howshold shal be myn eyre. And anoon the word of God was maad to hym, seiynge, This shal not be thin eire, but he of Chodorlaomor, and of kyngis[u] that weren with him, in the valei of Sabe, which is the valey of the kyng. And sotheli Melchisedech, kyng of Salem, brouȝte forth breed and wyn, for he was the[v] preest of hiȝeste[w] God; and he blesside Abram, and seide, Blessid be Abram of hiȝ God, that made heuene and erthe of nouȝt, and blessid be hiȝ God, bi whom defendynge, enemyes ben bitakun[x] in[y] thin hondis. And Abram ȝaf tithis of alle thingis to hym. Forsothe the kyng of Sodom seide to Abram, ȝyue thou the men to me; take thou othir thingis to thee. And Abram answerde to hym, Y reyse myn hondis[yy] to the hiȝ Lord God, Lord[z] of heuene and of erthe, that fro the threde of oof[a] til to the layner of the hose I schal not take of alle thingis that ben thine, lest thou seie, I made Abram[aa] riche; out takun these thingis whiche the ȝonge men eeten, and the partis of men that camen with me, Aner, Escol, and Mambre; these men schulen take her partis.

18 In that day the Lord couenauntide with Abram a bond of pees, seiynge, To thi seed I shal 3yue this lond, fro the flood hym eir, that schal go out of thi wombe.

And the Lord ledde out Abram, and seide 5 to hym, Biholde thou heuene, and noum-bre thou[f] sterris[g], if thou maist. And the Lord seide to Abram, So thi seed schal be.
Abram bileuede to God, and it was arettid[h] 6 to[i] hym to ri3tfulnesse[k]. And God seide 7 to hym, Y am the Lord, that ladde thee out of Vr of Caldeis, that Y schulde 3yue this lond to thee, and thou schuldist haue it in possessioun. And Abram seide, Lord 8 God[l], wherbi may[m] I wite that Y schal welde it? And the Lord answerde, and 9 seide, Take thou to me a cow of thre 3eer, and a geet of thre 3eer, and a ram of thre 3eer, a[n] turtle also, and a culuer. Which[o] 10 took alle these thingis, and departide tho bi the myddis, and settide[p] euer eithir partis[q] ech a3ens other; but he departide not the briddis. And foulis camen doun 11 on the careyns, and Abram drof hem awey. And whanne the sunne was gon 12 doun, drede felde on Abram, and a[r] greet hidousenesse and derk asaylide[s] him. And 13 it was seid to hym, Wite thou bifore know-inge, that thi seed schal be pilgrim foure hundrid 3eer in a lond not his owne, and thei schulen make hem suget to seruage, and thei schulen turment hem; netheles 14
Y schal deme the folk to whom thei schulen serue; and aftir these thingis thei schulen go out with greet catel. Forsothe thou 15

he seith, thin hand maydyn is in thin hond; vse hir as it is leueful. Thanne Saray ouertraueilynge hir, she 3ede into 7 fly3t. And whanne the aungel of the Lord hadde foundun hir biside the welle of water in wildirnes, the which is in the 8 weye of Sur in desert, he seide to hir, Agar, the hand mayden of Saray, whens comyst thow, and whithir gost thow?
9 The which answeride, Fro the face of Saray my ladi I flee. And the aungel of the Lord seide to hir, Turne a3en to thi ladi, and be meke vndir the hondis of 10 hir. And eft, Multipliynge, he seith, I shal multiplie thi seed, and it shal not be

18 nynti winter shal bere? And he seide to the Lord, Wolde God Ysmael lyue bifore
19 thee. And the Lord seide to Abraham, Sara, thi wijf, shal bere to thee a sone, and thow shalt cleep the name of hym Ysaac, and I shal ordeyne my couenaunt to hym into euerlastynge boond of pees, 20 and to his seed after hym; and vpon Ismael I haue herd thee, loo! I shal blis to hym, and I shal encrees, and I shal multiplie hym greetli; twelue dukis he shal gendre, and I shal make hym into 21 a greet folk of kynde. But my couenaunt I shal maak stonde to Ysaac, whom Sara shal bere to thee this tyme in the 22 tother 3eer. And whan the sermoun of the speker with hym was endid, God
23 stiede[d] vp fro Abraham. Abraham forsothe toke Ysmael, his sone, and alle the fre men of his hows, and alle whom he had bow3t, alle the malis of alle men 3ou, and thi seed after thee; ech male kynde of 3ou schal be circumcidid, and 3e 11 schulen circumside the fleisch of 3oure mannes 3eerd, that it be in to a signe of boond of pees bytwixe me and 3ou. A 3ong 12 child of ei3te daies schal be circumsidid in 3ou, al male kynde in 3oure generaciouns, as wel a borun seruaunt as a seruaunt bou3t schal be circumsidid, and who euere is of 3oure kynrede he schal be circumsidid; and my couenaunt schal be in 3oure 13 fleisch in to euerlastynge boond of pees. A man whos fleisch of his 3erde schal not 14 be circumsidid, thilke man schal be doon awei fro his puple; for he made voide my couenaunt. Also God seide to Abraham, 15
Thou schalt not clepe Saray, thi wijf, Sarai, but Sara; and Y schal blesse hir, and 16 of hir I schal 3yue to thee a sone, whom I schal blesse, and he schal be in to naciouns, and kyngis of puplis schulen be borun of hym. Abraham felde doun on his face, 17 and lei3ede in his hert, and seide, Gessist thou, whethir a sone[t] schal be borun to a man of an hundrid 3eer, and Sara of nynti 3eer schal bere child[u]? And he seide to 18 the Lord, Y wolde that Ismael lyue[v] bifore thee. And the Lord seide to Abraham, 19
Sara, thi wijf, schal bere a sone to thee, and thou schalt clepe his name Ysaac, and Y schal make my couenaunt to[w] hym in to euerlastynge boond of pees, and to his seed aftir hym; also on Ysmael Y haue herd 20 thee, lo! Y schal blesse him, and Y schal encreesse, and Y schal multiplie him greetli; he schal gendre twelue dukis, and Y schal make hym in to a greet folk. Forsothe Y 21 schal make my couenaunt to[x] Ysaac, whom Sare schal childe to thee in this tyme in[y] the tother[z] 3eer. And whanne the word 22 of the spekere with hym was endid, God stiede fro Abraham. Forsothe Abraham 23 took Ismael, his sone, and alle the borun seruauntis of his hous, and alle which he hadde bou3te, alle the malis of alle men of his hous, and circumsidide the fleisch of her 3erde, anoon in that dai, as the Lord 24 hym. Abraham was of nynti and nyne ȝeer whan he circumsidide the flehs of 25 the vttermore parti of his ȝerde, and Ismael, his sone, had fulfillid thrittene ȝeer 26 in tyme of his circumsicioun. And the same day was Abraham circumsidid, and 27 Ysmael his sone, and alle men[e] of hys hows, as wel fre men as bowȝt and aliens, togideris weren circumsidid.

CAP. XVIII.

1 The Lord forsothe aperyde to hym in the valey of Mambre, sittynge in the dore of his tabernacle, in that heet of the day.
2 And whan he had areride vp the eyen, thre men stondynge nyȝ hym aperiden to hym. Whom whan he had seen, he ranne into the aȝen comyng of hem fro the dore of his tabernacle, and he low-
3 tide into[f] the erthe, and seide, Lord, if I haue foundun grace in thin eyen, ouer-
4 passe thow not thi seruaunt, but I shal bringe to a litil mesure of water, and ȝoure fete be wayshid, and reste thow[g] comaundide him[a]. Abraham was of nynti 24 ȝeer and nyne whanne he circumsidide the fleisch of his ȝeerd, and Ismael, his 25 sone, hadde fillid threttene ȝeer in the tyme of his circumsicioun. Abraham was 26 circumsidid in the same day, and Ismael his sone, and alle men[b] of his hows, as 27 wel borun seruauntis as bouȝt and aliens, weren circumcidid togidre.

CAP. XVIII.

Forsothe in the valei of Mambre the 1
Lord apperide to Abraham, sittynge in the dore of his tabernacle, in thilke heete of the dai. And whanne he[c] hadde reisid[d] 2 his iȝen, thre men apperiden to hym, and stoden nyȝ hym[e]. And whanne he[f] hadde seyn hem, he ran fro the dore of his tabernacle in to the meting of hem, and he worschipide on erthe, and seide, Lord, if 3
Y haue founde grace in thin iȝen, passe thou not thi seruaunt, but I schal brynge[g] 4 a litil watir, and ȝoure feet be waischid, and reste ȝe vndur the tre; and Y schal 5 sette a mussel of breed, and ȝoure herte be coumfortid; aftirward ȝe schulen passe; for herfor ȝe bowiden to ȝoure seruaunt. Whiche seiden, Do thou as thou hast spoke. Abraham hastide in to the taber- 6 nacle, to Sare, and seide to hir, Hast thou, meddle thou[h] thre half buschelis of clene flour; and make thou looues bakun vndur aischis. Forsothe he ran to the droue of 7 beestis, and took therof a calf moost tendre and best, and ȝaf to a child, which hastide, and sethede the calfe; and he took botere, 8 and mylk, and the calf which he hadde sode, and settide[i] bifore hem; forsothe Abraham stood bisidis hem vndur the tre. And whanne thei hadden ete, thei seiden 9 to hym, Where is Sare thi wijf? He answerde, Lo! sche is in the tabernacle. To 10

11 nacle. Forsothe thei weren bothe oold, and of greet age, and to Sara fluxis of 12 blood hadden laft to be maad. The which lowȝ priueli, seiynge, After that I am bicom oold, and my lord is an olde man, shal I ȝyue bysynes to lust?
13 The Lord forsothe seide to Abraham, Whi lowȝ Sara, thi wijf, seiynge, whether I an oold woman am verreily to 14 bere child? whether eny thing is to God hard? Aftir the sawe bitwix vs I shal turne aȝen to thee this[k] same tyme, the lijf leder; and Sara shal haue a sone.
15 Sara denyede, seiynge, I lowȝ not, thurȝ drede afeerd. The Lord forsothe, It is 16 not, he seide[l], so, but thow lowȝ. Thanne whanne the men were rysun thens, thei dressiden her eyen aȝens Sodom; and Abraham ȝede with, ledynge forth hem.
17 And the Lord seide, Whether I mow hide fro Abraham thingis that Y am to 18 do, sith he is to be into a greet folk of kynde and moost strong, and alle naciouns of the[m] erthe ben to be blissid in 19 hym? I woot forsothe that he is to comaunde his sones, and to his hows aftir hym, that thei kepen the wey of the Lord, and that thei do ryȝtwisnes, and dom, that the Lord brynge to for Abraham alle thingis that he hath spokun to 20 hym. And so the Lord seide, The cry of Sodom and Gomor is multiplied, and 21 the synne of hem is myche agredgyd; I shal go down, and se whether the cry that is comen to me thei han fulfillid in 22 dede, or it[n] is not so that I wyte. And thei turneden hem silf[o] thens, and ȝeden awey[p] to Sodom. Abraham forsothe ȝit 23 stode bifore the Lord, and neiȝynge seith, Whether thow shalt lese the riȝtwis with 24 the wickyd? if there ben[q] fifti riȝtwis in and Y schal come to thee in this tyme, if Y lyue; and Sare, thi wijf, schal haue a sone. Whanne this was herd, Sare leiȝede bihynde the dore of the tabernacle. For- 11 sothe bothe weren olde, and of greet age, and wommans termes ceessiden to be maad to Sare. And she leiȝede, seiynge pryueli, 12 after that Y wexede eld, and my lord is eld, schal Y ȝyue diligence to lust? For- 13 sothe the Lord seide to Abraham, Whi leiȝeth[k] Sare, thi wijf, seiynge, whether Y an eld womman schal bere child[l] verili? 14 whether ony thing is hard to God? Bi the biheeste Y schal turne aȝen to thee in this[m] same tyme, if Y lyue; and Sara schal haue a sone. Sare was aferd for 15 drede, and denyede, seiynge, Y leiȝede not. Forsothe the Lord seide, It is not so, but thou leiȝedist. Therfor whanne the men 16 hadden risen[n] fro thennus, thei dressiden the iȝen aȝens Sodom; and Abraham ȝede to gidre, ledynge hem forth. And the 17
Lord seide, Wher Y mowe hele fro Abraham what thingis Y schal do, sithen he 18 schal be in to a greet folk and moost strong, and alle naciouns of erthe schulen be blessid in hym? For Y woot that Abra- 19 ham schal comaunde hise children, and his hows after hym, that thei kepe the weie of the Lord, and that thei do riȝtfulnesse and dom, that the Lord bringe for Abraham alle thingis whiche he spak to Abraham. And so the Lord seide, The cry of men 20 of Sodom and of men of Gomorre is multiplied, and her synne is agreggid greetli; Y schal come doun, and schal[nn] se whether 21 thei han fillid in werk the cry that cam to me, that Y wite whether[o] it is not so. And 22 thei turneden han fro thennus, and ȝeden to Sodom. Abraham sotheli[p] stood ȝit bifore the Lord, and neiȝede, and seide, 23

I biseche, he seith, Lord, be thow not wrooth, if 3it oons I speke; what if there be foundun ten? He seide, 33 I shal not do awey for ten. The Lord 3ede aweie, after that he had ceesid to speke to Abraham, and he was turnyd a3en into his place.

CAP. XIX.

1 And two aungels comen to Sodom at euen, sittynge Loth in the 3atis of the cyte. The whiche, whanne he had seen hem, roos, and 3ede to mete with hem, and honowride[v] bowide into the erthe, 2 and seide, I prey 3ow, syres, bowith down into the hows of 3oure child, and dwellith there; wayshith 3oure fete, and erly be it fro thee that thou do this thing, and sle a[t] iust man[u] with a[t] wickid man[u], and that a iust man be maad as a wickid man; this is not thin that demest al erthe; thou schalt not make this doom. And the Lord 26 seide to him, If Y schal fynde in Sodom fifti iust men in the[v] myddis of the citee, Y schal for3yue to al the place for hem. Abraham answerde and seide, For Y bigan 27 onys, Y schal speke to my Lord, sithen Y am dust and aische[w]; what if lesse than 28 fifti iust men bi fyue ben, schalt thou do awey al the cite for fyue and fourti? And the Lord seide, Y schal not do awei, if I schal fynde fyue and fourti there. And[x] 29 eft Abraham seide to hym, But if fourti ben there, what schalt thou do? The Lord seide, Y schal not smyte[y] for fourti. Abraham seide, Lord, Y biseche, take thou 30 not to [z]indignacioun[a], if Y speke; what if thretti be foundun there? The Lord answerde, Y schal not do, if Y schal fynde thretti there. Abraham seide, For Y bigan 31 onys, Y schal speke to my Lord; what if twenti be foundun there? The Lord seide, Y schal not sle for twenti. Abraham seide, 32 Lord, Y biseche, be thou not wrooth, if Y speke 3it onys; what if ten be founden there? The Lord seide, Y schal not do awey for ten. The Lord 3ede forth, after 33 that he ceesside to speke to Abraham, and Abraham turnede a3en in to his place.

19 shal make hym. And God openede the eyen of hir, the whiche seynge the pit of water, ȝede, and fillide the botel, and ȝaue 20 the child to drynk; and was with hym, the whiche wex, and dwellid in wildyrnes, 21 and he was maad a ȝong sheter, and dwellid in the desert of Pharan; and his modir toke to hym a wijf of the lond of 22 Egipt. The same tyme seide Abymalech, and Phicol, the prince of his oost, to Abraham, God is with thee in alle 23 thingis that thow dost; thanne swere by God that thow noye not to me, ne to myn aftir comers, and to my lynage; but after the mercy that I haue do to thee, do thow to me, and to the loond in which the handmayde schal not be eir with my sone Ysaac. Abraham took this heuyli for 11 his sone; and God seide to hym, Be it not 12 seyn scharp to thee on the[z] child, and on seith to thee, here thou hir vois, for in Isaac seed schal be clepid to thee; but 13 also I schal make the sone of the hand-maid in to a greet folk, for he is thi seed.

And so Abraham roos eerli, and took 14 breed, and a botel of watir, and puttide[b] on hir[c] schuldre, and bitook[d] the child, and lefte hir; and whanne sche hadde go, sche ȝede out of the weie in the[e] wildir-

Y schal not se the child diynge; and sche sat aȝens, and reiside hir vois, and wepte.
Forsothe the Lord herde the vois of the 17 child, and the aungel of the Lord clepide Agar fro heuene, and seide, What doist thou[h], Agar? nyle thou drede, for God hath herd the vois of the child fro the place where ynne he is. Rise thou, and 18 take the child, and holde his hoond; for Y schal make hym in to a greet folc. And 19
God openyde hir iȝen, and sche seiȝ a pit thingis weren don, it was teld to Abraham that also Melcha hadde bore sones to Nachor his brother; Hus the firste gendrid[x], 21 and Buz his brothir, and Chamuhel the fadir of Sireis[y], and Cased, and Asan, and 22

Feldas, and Jedlaf, and Batuhel, of whom 23
Rebecca was borun; Melcha childide these ei3te to Nachor brother[z] of Abraham. For- 24 sothe his[a] concubyn[b], Roma bi name, childide Thabee, and Gaon, and Thaas, and Maacha.

CAP. XXIII.

Forsothe Sare lyuede an hundrid and 1 seuene and twenti 3eer, and diede in the 2
citee of[c] Arbee, which[d] is Ebron, in the lond of Chanaan; and Abraham cam to biweyle and biwepe hir. And whanne he 3

Efron answerde to Abraham, while alle men herden that entriden bi the ȝate of that citee, and seide, My lord, it schal not 11 be doon so, but more herkne thou that that[h] Y seie; Y ȝyue to thee the feeld, and the[i] denne[k] which is therine, while the sones of my puple ben present; birie thou thi[l] deed bodi. Abraham worschipide bi- 12 for the Lord, and bifor the puple of the lond, and[m] he spak to Efron, while his 13 puple stood aboute, Y biseche, that thou here me; Y schal ȝyue money for the feeld, resseyue thou it, and so Y schal birie my deed bodi in the feeld. And Efron an- 14
swerde, My lord, here thou me, the lond 15 which thou axist[n] is worth foure hundrid siclis of siluer, that[o] is the prijs bitwixe me and thee, but hou myche is this? birie thou thi deed bodi. And whanne Abra- 16 ham hadde herd this, he noumbride the monei which Efron axide, while the sones of Heth herden, foure hundrid siclis of siluer, and of preuyd comyn monei. And 17
the feeld that was sumtyme of Efron, in which feeld was a double denne, biholdinge to Mambre, as wel thilke feeld as the denne and alle[p] the[q] trees therof, in alle termes[r] therof bi cumpas, was confermed to Abraham in to possessioun, while the 18 sones of Heth seiȝen and alle men that entriden bi the ȝate of that citee. And 19 so Abraham biriede Sare, his wijf, in the double denne of the feeld, that bihelde to Mambre; this is Ebron in the lond of Chanaan. And the feeld, and the denne 20 that was therynne, was confermyd of the sones of Heth to Abraham, in to possessioun of sepulcre[s].

womman nyle[t] come with me in to this[u] lond, whether Y owe lede[v] a3en thi sone to the place, fro which thou 3edist out? Abraham seide, Be war, lest ony tyme 6
thou lede a3en thidur my sone; the Lord[w] 7 of heuene that took me fro the hows of my fadir, and fro the lond of my birthe, which spak to me, and swoor, and seide, Y schal 3yue this lond to thi seed, he schal sende his aungel bifore thee, and thou schalt take fro thennus a wijf to my sone; forsothe if the womman nyle[x] sue thee, 8 thou schalt not be holdun bi[y] the ooth; netheles lede not a3en my sone thidur. Therfore the seruaunt puttide his hond 9 vndur the hipe of Abraham, his lord, and swoor to him on this word. And he took 10 ten camels of the floc of his lord, and 3ede forth, and bar with him of alle the goodis of his lord; and he 3ede forth, and cam to Mesopotanye, to the citee of Nachor. And whanne he hadde maad the camels 11 to reste with out the citee, bisidis the[z] pit of watir, in the euentid, in that tyme in which wymmen ben wont to go out to[a] drawe watir, he seide, Lord[b] God of my 12

13 to hym. And the man fel ryche, and he 3ede profytynge and vndurgrowynge to the tyme that he was maad hugeli greet.
14 And he hadde possessiouns of sheep, and of droues, and of meyne mych. For that 15 Palestynes noiynge[n] to hym, stoppiden alle the pittis the whiche the seruauntis of his fader Abraham that tyme hadden
16 doluun, fulfillynge with erthe, in so myche that hym silf Abymalech seide to Ysaac, Goo awey fro vs, for greetli thow art
17 maad my3tyer than we. And he goynge thens, that he come to the rennynge watir
18 of Gerare, and dwelle there, eftsones he deluyde other pittis, the whiche the seruauntis of his fader Abraham delueden, and whom, hym deed, sumtyme Philistiens stoppiden; and he clepide hem the same names, in the whiche the fader hadde
19 clepid bifore. The deluyden in the rennynge watir, and thei fonden quyk watir.
20 But and there was striyf of the sheepherdis of[o] Gerare a3enus the sheepherdis of Isaac, seiynge, Oure[p] is the water; wherfor the name of the pit of that that[q]
21 felle he clepide chalange. And thei delueden anothir, and for thilk forsothe thei
22 stryuen, and he clepide it enmytese. Fro thens goon he deluyde another pit, for which thei stryuen not, and so he clepide the name of it breede, seiynge, Now God hath sprad vs a brood, and he hath maad 23 growe vpon the erthe. Forsothe fro that 24 place he stei3 vp into Bersabe, where the Lord aperyde to hym in that ny3t, seiynge, I am the God of Abraham, thi fader; nil thou not drede, for I am with thee, and I shal blisse to thee, and I shal thou haddist brou3t in greuous[v] synne on[w] vs. And the kyng comaundide to al the puple, and seide, He that touchith the 11 wijf of this man schal die bi deeth. For- 12 sothe Isaac sowide[x] in that lond, and he foond an hundrid fold[y] in that 3eer; and the Lord blesside hym. And the man 13 was maad riche, and he 3ede profitynge and encreessynge til he was maad ful greet. Also he hadde possessioun[z] of scheep 14 and grete[a] beestis, and ful myche of meyne. For this thing Palestyns hadden enuye to hym, and thei stoppiden in that tyme and 15
filliden with erthe alle the pittis whiche the seruauntis of Abraham his fadir hadden diggid, in so myche that Abymelech 16 him silf seide to Ysaac, Go thou awei fro vs, for thou art maad greetly my3tier than we. And he 3ede awei, that he schulde 17 come to the stronde of Gerare, and dwelle[b] there. And he diggide eft other pittis, 18 whiche the seruauntis of Abraham his fadir hadden diggid, and whiche the Filisteis hadden stoppid sumtyme, whanne Abraham was deed; and he[c] clepide tho[d] pittis bi[e] the same names, bi whiche his fadir hadde clepid bifore. Thei diggiden 19 in the stronde, and thei founden wellynge[f] watir. But also strijf of scheepherdis of 20 Gerare was there a3ens the[g] scheepherdis of Isaac, and thei seiden, The watir is oure[h]; wherfor of that[i] that bifelde he[k] clepide the name of the[l] pit fals chaleng. And thei diggiden anothir, and thei 21 stryueden also for that, and Ysaac clepide that pit enemytes. And he 3ede forth 22 fro thennus, and diggide another pit, for which[m] thei stryueden not, therfor he clepid the name of that pit largenesse[n]; and seide, Now God hath alargid vs, and hath maad[o] to encreesse on erthe. For- 23
sothe[p] he stiede[q] fro that place in to Bersabee, where the Lord God[r] apperide to 24 took al his substaunce, flockis, and alle thingis that he hadde purchasid in Mesopotany, goynge to Ysaac, his fader, in the loond of Chanaan. That tyme Laban was goon to the sheep that shulden be clippid, and Rachel hadde stolne the mawmetis of hir fadir. And Jacob nolde knowleche to his wyues fader, that he wolde flee; and whanne he was goon, bothe he and alle thingis that weren of his riȝt, and the flode passid ouer shulde go aȝens the hil of Galaad, it was tolde to Laban, the thridde day, that Jacob fleeiȝ. The which, his britheren takun with hym, pursuede hym seuen dayes, and ouertook hym in the hil of Galaad. And he sawȝ in his sleep the Lord seiynge to hym, Be war lest eny thing sharply thow speek aȝens Jacob. And now Jacob hadde strauȝte a tabernacle in the hil; and whan he hadde takun[x] hym with his britheren, in the same hil of Galaad, he ficchide a tent; and he seide to Jacob, Whi didist thow thus, that bisyde me thow dryue awey my dowȝtris[y] as caytyues with swerde? Whi vnwitynge me[yy] woldist thow fle, ne shewe to me, that Y myȝte forth folwe thee with ioye, and songis, and tympans, and harpis? Thow suffredist not that Y myȝte kisse my sones and dowȝtris[y]; folily thow hast wrouȝt. And now forsothe myn hoond may ȝeeld to thee yuel, but God of thi fader ȝistirday seide to me, Be war lest thow speek with Jacob eny thing harder. And if thow coueytidist[z] to[a] goo to thine, and the hows of thi fadir was in desiyr to thee, whi hast thow stoln my goddis? Jacob answeride, That thus fro thee I am goon forth, Y dredde lest violentli thow shuldist taak awey thi dowȝtris[b]; that forsothe thow vndirnymist me of thefte, anentist whom euer thow fyndist thi goddis, be he slaw biforn our britheren; and serch what euer of thi thing[c] anentis me thow fyndist[d], and taak awey. In that tyme Laban ȝede[y] to schere[z] scheep, and Rachel stal the idols of hir fadir. And Jacob nolde[a] knouleche to the fadir of his wijf[b], that he wolde fle[c]; and whanne he[d] hadde go[e], as wel he as alle thingis that weren of his riȝt, and whanne he hadde passid the water, and he ȝede aȝens the hil of Galaad, it was teld to Laban, in the thridde dai, that Jacob fledde[f]. And Laban took his britheren, and pursuede hym[g] seuene daies, and took[h] hym in the hil of Galaad. And Laban seiȝ in sleep[i] the Lord seiynge to him, Be war that thou speke not ony thing sharpli aȝens Jacob. And thanne Jacob hadde stretchid[k] forth the[l] tabernacle in the hil; and whanne he[m] hadde sued Jacob with his britheren, he settide[n] tente in the same hil of Galaad; and he seide to Jacob, Whi hast thou do so, that the while I wiste not thou woldist[o] dryue awey my douȝtris as caitifs[p] by swerd? Whi woldist thou fle the while Y wiste not, nether woldist shewe to me, that Y shulde sue thee with ioie, and songis, and tympans, and harpis? Thou suffridist not that Y schulde kisse my sones and douȝtris; thou hast wrouȝt folili. And now sotheli myn hond mai ȝelde yuel to thee, but the God of thi fadir seide to me ȝisterdai, Be war that thou speke not ony harder[q] thing with Jacob. Suppose, if thou coueitedist to go to thi kynesmen, and the hows of thi fadir was in desir to thee, whi hast thou stole my goddis? Jacob answeride, That Y ȝede forth while thou wistist not, Y dredde lest thou woldist take awey thi douȝtris[r] violentli; sotheli that thou repreuest[s] me of thefte, at whom euer thou fyndist thi goddis, be he slayn bifor oure britheren; seke thou, what euer thing of thine thou fyndist at me, and take[t] awei. and putte we hym[u] in an olde sistern, and we shulen seye, The werst wiylde beest hath deuowrid hym; and thanne it shal apere what profiten to hym hys dremes.

21 Thes thingis forsothe herynge Ruben, enforside to delyuere hym of the hondis 22 of hem, and seide, Slee we not the lijf of hym, ne shede we blood, but throw 3e him into the olde sisterne, that is in wil-dernes, and kepe 3e 3oure hondes vngilti.
That forsothe he seide, wilnynge to de-lyuer hym fro the hondes of hem, and to 23 3elde to his fader. Thanne anoon as he cam to his britheren, thei nakiden hym
the side coote to the hele, and of manye 24 colowrs, and puttiden into an olde sis-25 terne, that hadde no watyr. And sittynge for to eet breed, thei seen Ysmaelitis weiegoers to comen fro Galaad, and camels of hem berynge swete spyces, and swete gumme, and myrre, into Egipte.
26 Thanne Judas seide to his britheren,
What shal it profit vs if we sleen oure brother, and we hiden the blood of hym?
27 It is betere that he be sold to Ismaelitis, and our hondes ben not defoulid; for-sothe the brother and oure flesh he is.
The britheren assentiden to thes wordes;
28 and the marchaundes Madyanytes goynge bisides, thei, drawynge hym oute of the sis-terne, solden hym to Ysmaelytis for thretti siluer pens; the whiche ladden hym into 29 Egipte. And Ruben turned a3en to the bron, and cam into Sichem; and a man 15 foond hym errynge[m] in the feeld, and 'the man[n] axide[o], what he sou3te. And he an- 16 swerde, Y seke my britheren, schewe thou to me where thei kepten[p] flockis[q]. And 17 the man seide to hym[r], Thei 3eden awei fro this place; forsothe Y herde hem seiynge, Go we into Dothaym. And Joseph 3ede[s] aftir his britheren, and foond hem in Dothaym. And whanne thei had- 18 den seyn hym afer, bifor that[t] he nei3ede to hem, thei thou3ten to sle hym, and 19 spaken[u] togidere, Lo! the dremere cometh, come 3e, sle we hym, and sende[v] we[w] into 20 an eld sisterne, and we schulen seie, A wielde beeste ful wickid hath deuourid hym; and thanne it schal appere what hise dremes profiten to hym. Sotheli Ruben 21 herde this, and enforside[x] to delyuere hym[y] fro her hondis, and seide, Sle we not the 22 whiche thei hadden resseyued of him, and the more part cam to Beniamyn, so that it passide in fyue partis; and thei drunken, and weren fillid with him.

CAP. XLIV.

Forsothe Joseph comaundid the dispen- 1 dere of his hous, and seide, Fille thou her sackis with wheete, as myche as tho[y] moun take, and putte thou the money of ech in the hiȝnesse[z] of the sak; forsothe put thou 2 in the mouth of the sak[a] of the ȝongere[b] my silueren[c] cuppe, and the prijs of wheete[d] which he ȝaf; and it was doon so. And 3 whanne the morewtid roos, thei weren delyuered with her assis. And now thei had- 4 den go out of the citee, and hadden go forth a litil; thanne Joseph seide, whanne the dispendere of his hous was clepid, Rise thou, pursue[e] the men, and seye thou whanne thei ben takun, Whi han ȝe ȝolde yuel for good? The cuppe, which ȝe han 5 stole, is thilk in which my lord drynkith, and in which he is wont to dyuyne; ȝe han do a ful[f] wickid thing. He dide as 6 Joseph comaundid, and whanne thei weren takun, he spak bi ordre. Whiche[g] answer- 7

CAP. XLVII.

1 Joseph thanne goon yn tolde to Pharao, seiynge, My fader and bretheren, the sheep of hem, and droues, and alle the thingis that thei han, ben comen fro the loond of Chanaan; and loo! thei ben in 2 the loond of Gessen. And fyue men, the last of his bretheren, he sette bifore the 3 kyng, whom he askide, What han 3e of werke? Thei[i] answerden, Sheepherdes of sheep we ben, thi seruauntis, and we and 4 our fadres; to pilgrimage into thi loond we ben comen, for there is noon eerbe to the flockis of thi seruauntis; hungur[j] meche wexynge greuows in the loond of Chanaan, and we axen that thow co-maunde vs to be thi seruauntis in the 5 loond of Gessen. And so the kyng seide to Joseph, Thi fader and thi bretheren 6 ben comen to thee; the loond of Egipte is in thi si3t, in the beste place make hem to dwelle, and tak to hem the loond of Gessen; and if thow hast knowe to be redi men in hem, ordeyne hem maystrys ladde yn his fader to the kyng, and sette hym beforn hym, the which blessynge to 8 hym, and askyde of hym, How feele ben 9 the dayes of the 3eris of thi lijf? He answerde, The dayes of the pilgrimage hym, My britheren, and the hows of my fadir, that weren in the lond of Canaan, ben comun to me, and thei ben men kepers 32 of scheep, and han bisynesse of flockis to

And whanne he[z] hadde blessid the kyng, he 3ede out. Forsothe Joseph 3af to hise fadir and britheren possessioun in Egipt, in Ramasses, the beste soile of erthe, as Farao comaundide; and he fedde hem, and al the hows of his fadir, and 3af metis to alle[a]. For breed failide in al the world, and hungur oppresside the lond, moost of Egipt and of[b] Canaan; of whiche londis he[c] gaderide al the money for the[d] sillyng of wheete, and brou3te it in to the `tresorie of the kyng[e]. And whanne prijs[f] failide to the[g] bieris, al Egipt cam to Joseph, and seide, 3yue thou `looues to vs[h]; whi shulen we die bifore[i] thee, while monei failith? To whiche[k] he answeride, Brynge 3e 3oure beestis, and Y schal 3yue to[l] 3ou metis for tho, if 3e han not prijs. And whanne thei hadden brou3t tho, he 3af to[m] hem metis for horsis[n], and scheep, and oxun[o], and assis; and he susteynede hem in that 3eer for the chaungyng[p] of beestis. And thei camen in the secunde 3eer, and seiden to hym, We helen[q] not fro oure lord, that the while monei failith, also beestis failiden togidere, nether it is hid fro thee, that with out bodies and lond we han no thing; whi therfor schulen we die, while[r] thou seest[s]? bothe we and oure lond schulen be thine, bie thou vs in to the kyngis seruage, and 3yue thou seedis[t], lest the[u] while the tiliere perischith, the lond be turned in to wildirnesse. 4 and to thee, and to thi puple, and to alle thi seruauntes shulen goon yn froggis.
5 And the Lord seide to Moyses, Sey to Aaron, Strecche out thi hoond vpon floodes, and vpon ryuers, and mershes; and brynge out frogges vpon the loond
6 of Egipte. And Aaron strauȝte out the hoond vpon the watris of Egipte; and there steyden vp frogges, and couerden
7 the loond of Egipte. And the clepers of deuels diden by her enchauntyngis lijk maner; and brouȝten out frogges vpon[q]
8 the loond of Egipte. Forsothe Pharao clepide Moyses and Aaron, and seiden to hem, Preye ȝe the Lord, that he do awey frogges fro me, and fro my puple; and Y shal lat the puple, that thei sacryfye to 9 the Lord. And Moyses seide to Pharao, Ordeyn me a tyme, whan Y shal preye for thee, and for thi seruauntis, and for thi puple, that the frogges ben dreuen awey fro thee, and fro thin hows, and took it[s] to herte[t], ȝhe[u], in this tyme[v]. For- 24 sothe alle Egipcians diggiden watir 'bi the cumpas of[w] the[x] flood, to drinke; for thei myȝten not drynke of the[y] 'watir of[z] the flood. And seuene daies weren fillid[a], 25 aftir that the Lord smoot the flood.

was ȝeue rest, his herte engredgide, and herde not hem, as the Lord comaundide.
16 And the Lord seide to Moyses, Spek to Aaron, Strecche out thi ȝerde, and smyit the powdre of the erthe, that there ben stynggynge gnattes[r] in al the loond of 17 Egipte. And he dide so; and Aaron strauȝte out the hoond, holdynge the ȝerde, and he smote the powdre of the erthe;
and there weren maad stynggynge gnattes in men, and in beestis; al the powdre of the erthe is turnyd into stynggynge gnattes thurȝ out al the loond of Egipte.
18 And liyk manere diden the clepers of deuels in her enchauntyngis[rr], that thei myȝten dryue out the stynggynge gnattes, and thei myȝten not; and stynggynge[s] gnattes weren bothe in men and in beestis.
19 And the clepers of deuels seiden vnto Pharao, The fyngur of God ys here. And the herte of Pharao was greetli hardid, and he herde hem not, as the Lord 20 hadde[ss] comaundide. And the Lord seide to Moyses, Aryse eerli, and stoond before Pharao, forsothe he shal goon out to the watris; and thow shalt sey to hym, Thes and fro thi puple; and dwelle oneli in the flood. And he[r] answeride, To morewe. And 10 Moises seide, Y schal do bi thi word, that thou wite, that noon is as oure Lord God; and the paddoks[s] schulen go awei fro thee, 11
and fro thin hous, and fro thi children, and fro thi seruauntis, and fro thi puple;
and tho[t] schulen dwelle oneli in the flood.
And Moises and Aaron ȝeden[u] out fro Fa- 12
rao. And Moises criede to the Lord, for the biheest of paddoks[v], which he hadde seid to Farao. And[w] the Lord dide bi the 13 word of Moises; and the paddoks[x] weren deed fro housis, and fro townes, and fro feeldis; and thei gaderiden tho[y] in to grete 14 heepis, and the lond was rotun[z]. Sotheli 15 Farao seiȝ that reste was ȝouun, and he made greuous his herte, and herde[a] not hem, as the Lord comaundide. And the 16
Lord seide to Moises, Spek thou to Aaron, Holde forth thi[b] ȝerde, and smyte the dust of erthe[c], and litle flies, ether[d] gnattis, be in al the lond of Egipt. And thei diden 17 so; and Aaron helde forth the hond, and helde the ȝerde, and smoot[e] the[f] duste of erthe[g]; and gnattis weren maad in men, and in werk beestis; al the dust of erthe[h]

of Yrael, that thei dwelliden yn Egipte, 41 was of four hundred and thretti 3eer; the whiche fulfillid, the same day 3ede al the oost of the Lord out of the loond of E-42 gipte. This is ny3t of the Lord able to be kept, whanne he ladde hem out of the loond of Egipte; this owen to kepe alle the sones of Yrael in her generaciouns.
43 The Lord forsothe seide to Moyses and Aaron, This is the religioun of phask;
44 ech alien shal not ete therof; al forsothe lempnyte of pask. The chefe of the fruytes of thi loond thow shalt offre in the hows of the Lord thi God. Thow shalt not seethe a kidde in the mylk of his moder. And the Lord seide to Moyses, Write to thee thes wordes, with whiche Y haue couenauntide a boond of pees, with thee and with Yrael. Thanne Moyses was there with the Lord fourti dayes and fourti nyȝtis, and eete no breed, ne drank water[a]; and he wroot in the tables the ten wordes of the boond of pees. And whanne Moyses descendide fro the mownt of Synay, he held two tables of testymonye, and he wiste not that his face was horned of the cumpanye of the word of God. Aaron forsothe and the sones of Yrael, seynge the face of Moyses horned, thei dredden to comen nyȝ, and thei clepid of hym turneden aȝen, as wel Aaron as the princes of the synagoge; and after that he had spokun, comen to hym also alle the sones of Yrael; to whom he comaundide alle thinges that he hadde herd of the Lord in the mownt of Synay. And fulfillid the wordes, he putte a veyle vpon his face; the which, he goon yn to the Lord, and spekynge with him, dide awey, to the tyme that he shulde goo out; and thanne he spak to the sones of Yrael alle thinges, that to hym weren comaundid; the whiche seen the face of Moyses goynge out be horned, but eft he couerde his face, if eny tyme he spak to hem.

11 he cowplede togidere to hem seluen; and he made iacynctyne oyletis[t] in the hemme 12 of the o cortyn on either syde, and in the hemme of the other also, that the oyletis[t] my3ten come a3ens hem seluen togidere, 13 and togidere be ioyned; wherfore and fifti golden cerclis he 3eetide, that my3ten hold the oiletes[t] of the cortyns, and that 14 there were maad o tabernacle. And he made enleuen sarges[u] of the heeris of goote, to couere the roofe of the taber-15 nacle; o sarge[v] in lengthe hadde thretti cubitis, and in brede foure cubitis; of o 16 mesure weren alle the sarges[w]; of whom fyue he ioynede a side, and othere six a-17 twynne. And he made fifty oyletis[x] in the hemme of the o sarge[y], and fifti in the hemme of the tothir[z] sarge[y], that to hem seluen thei my3ten be ioynede to 18 gidere; and fifti brasun knoppis with whiche[a] the roof my3te be knyt, and o 19 mantil be made of alle the sarges[b]. And he made the couertour of the tabernacle of skynnes of wethers maad reed, and another aboue the veyle of skynnes[c] maad 20 blew. And he made the tablis of the tabernacle of the[d] trees of Sichym stond-21 ynge; of ten cubites was the lengthe of the to[e] table, and other half cubijt the 22 brede heeld. Two rabitynges weren bi eche tables, that the tone[f] to 'that other[g] my3t be ioyned; so he made in alle the 23 tablis of the tabernacle. Of the whiche twenti weren at the mydday coost a3ens 24 the sowth, with fourti silueren footstakys; two footstakis vndur o table weren put at eithir parti of the corners, where the rabityngis of the sides in the corners 25 weren endid. At the coost forsothe of the tabernacle that biholdith to the north 26 he made twenti tablis, with fourti sil-fyue curteyns oon to[q] anothir, and he couplide othere fyue to hem silf togidere; and 11 he made handlis[r] of iacynt in the hemme of o[s] curteyn on euer either side, and in 12 lijk maner in the hemme of the tother curteyn, that the handlis[t] schulen comen to was maad. 'He made[a] also enleuene saies 14 of the heeris[b] of geet, to hile the roof of the tabernacle; o saie hadde thretti cu- 15 bitis in lengthe, foure cubitis in breede; alle the saies weren of o mesure; of whiche[c] 16 saies he ioynede fyue bi[d] hem silf, and sixe othere bi hem silf. And he made fifti 17 handlis[e] in the hemme of o say, and fifti in the hemme of the tother[f] say, that tho schulden be ioyned to hem silf togidere; and he made fifti bokelis of bras bi[g] whiche 18

the roof was fastned togidere, that oon hilyng were[h] maad of alle the saies. He 19 made also an hilyng of the tabernacle of the skynnes of rammes[i] maad reed, and another veil aboue of skynnes[k] of iacynt.
He made also stondynge tablis of the ta- 20
bernacle of the trees of Sechym; the 21 lengthe of o table was of ten cubitis, and the breede helde o cubit and an[l] half.
Twey dentyngis weren bi ech table, that 22 the oon[m] schulde be ioyned to the[n] tother[o];
so he made in al the tablis of the tabernacle. Of whiche tablis twenti weren at 23 the mydday coost a3ens the south, with 24 fourti foundementis[p] of siluer; twey foun-dementis[q] weren set vndur o table on euer either side of the corneris, where the dentyngis[r] of the sidis weren endid in the cor-

30 on eithir parti bi the corners, that eiȝt tablis weren togidere, and hadden sixtene silueren footstakis, that is, two silueren 31 footstakis vnder eche tablis. And he made berynge staues, fyue of the trees of Sichym to hold togidere the tablis of the 32 to side of the tabernacle, and fyue othere to make togidere the tables of the tother side, and withouten thes, fyue othere ber-ynge staues at the west coost of the ta-33 bernacle aȝens the see. And he made another berynge staf, that shulde come thurȝ the myddil tables fro corner vnto[h] 34 corner. And thilk tablid thingis he giltide, ȝotun the siluer footstakis of hem, and he made the cercles of hem golden, bi the whiche the berynge barres[i] myȝten be lad ynne, the whiche and hem he couerde 35 with golden[k] platis. And he made the veyle dyuerse and sondrye, of iacynct, and purpur, `reed silk[l], and bijs foldid 36 aȝen, with browdrye werk; and foure pi-leris of the trees of Sichym, the whiche with the heedis he gildide, ȝoten the sil-37 uer footstakis of hem. And he made a tente in the entre of the tabernacle, of iacynct, and purpur, reed silk, and bijs 38 foldid aȝen, with the werk of nedlis; and fyue pylers with her heedis, the whiche he couerde with gold, and the brasun footstakis of hem he ȝetide, the whiche he couerde with gold.

twei foundementis[t] bi ech table. Forsothe 27
aȝens the west† he made sixe tablis, and 28 tweyne othere tablis bi ech corner of the tabernacle bihinde, whiche[u] weren ioyned 29 fro bynethe til to aboue, and weren[v] borun in to o ioynyng togidere; so he made on euer either part bi the corneris, that tho[w] 30 weren eiȝte tablis togidere, and hadden[x] sixtene foundementis[y] of siluer, that is, twei foundementis[y] vndur ech table. He 31 made also barris[z] of the[a] trees of Sechym, fyue barris[z] to holde togidere the tablis of o[b] side of the tabernacle, and fyue 32 othere barris[z] to schappe[c] togidere the ta-blis of the tother side; and without these, he made fyue othere barris[d] at the west coost of the tabernacle aȝens the see. He 33 made also another barre[e], that schulde come bi the myddil[f] tables fro corner til to corner. Forsothe he ouergildide[g] tho[h] 34 goldun serclis[q] `of tho[r], bi whiche[s] the barris myȝten be brouȝt in, and be hilide the[t] same barris with goldun platis. He 35 made also a veil dyuerse and departid, of iacynt, and purpur, and[u] reed selk, and bijs[v] foldid[w] aȝen bi werk[x] of broiderie.

He made also foure pileris of `the trees 36 of Sechym[y], whyche pileris with the heedis
he ouergildide[z], and ȝetide[a] the[b] siluerne foundementis[c] `of tho[d]. He made also in 37 the entryng of the tabernacle a tent of iacynt, and purpur, and[e] reed[f] selk `and bijs[g] foldid[h] aȝen bi the werk of a[i] broy-

CAP. IX.

1 The ei3t day forsothe doon, Moyses clepide Aaron, and his sones, and the greet men thur3 birthe of Yrael; and he 2 seide to Aaron, Tak fro the droue a calf for synne, and a wether into brent sacrifice, eithir with out wemme, and offre 3 hem before the Lord. And thow shalt speke to the sones of Yrael, Take ȝe a geyt for synne, and a calf, and a lombe of o ȝeer and without wemme, into brent 4 sacrifice, an oxe and a wether for pesible thingis; and offre ȝe hem before the Lord, in the sacrifice of echon offrynge tried flour spreynt with oyle; to day forsothe 5 the Lord shal apere to ȝow. Thanne thei token alle thingis, that Moyses hadde comaundide, at the dore of the tabernacle, where, whanne al the multitude stoode, 6 Moyses seïth, This is the word that the Lord comaundide, do ȝe, and the glorie 7 of hym shal apere to ȝow. And he seide to Aaron, Come ny3 to the auter, and offre for thi synne; offre brent sacrifice, and prey for thee, and the[y] puple; and whanne thou sleest the hoost of the puple, prey for hem, as the Lord hath co- 8 maundide. And anoon Aaron goynge to the auter offred a calf for his synne; 9 whos blood his sones offreden to hym, in the which wetynge the fyngre he towchide the hornes of the auter, and heelde the be fillid[l]; for the halewyng is endid in seuene dayes, as it is doon[m] in present[n] 34 tyme, that the ri3tfulnesse[o] of sacrifice[p] were fillid[q]. ȝe schulen dwelle dai and 35 ny3t in the tabernacle, and ȝe[r] schulen kepe the kepyngis of the Lord, that ȝe die not; for so it is comaundid to me. And 36 Aaron and hise sones diden alle thingis, whiche the Lord spak bi the hond of Moises.

[Prologue on the book of Numbers.]

THIS book clepid Numeri, that is to seie, the book of Noumbre, makith mencioun, how the Lord comaundide Moises and Aaron to noumbre the sones of Israel bi her names writen, alle men that weren fro twenti ȝeer and aboue, of stronge men and able to batel. Sothli the Leuytis weren not noumbrid with hem, bi the comaundement of the Lord, but bi hem self in to the seruyse of the tabernacle. And the Lord comaundide to Moises to sende aspiers to biholde the lond of Canaan, of ech lynage o man; whiche whanne thei hadden biholde, and weren comen aȝen, discomforteden al the peple, out taken Josue and Caleph, whiche aȝenseiden the othere aspiers. And al the peple mournede and wepte, wherfore the Lord turnede hem aȝen in to desert, and seide, that noon of tho that weren noumbrid scholde come in the lond of Canaan, but Josue and Caleph; but walke aboute in wildernesse fourti ȝeer, and deie therinne; and after fourti ȝeer the sones of hem, that weren not noumbrid, scholden entre, and welde the lond. Also of alle dissenciouns that bifellen in the desert, and veniaunces of the peple, and how thei wunnen al the londe biȝende Jordan; and of the deeth of Aaron; and how the peple was noumbrid eftsone by Moises and Eleasar prest; and the Lord bad Moises to take veniaunce of the peple of Madian, and thanne he scholde be gaderid to his peple. Here endith the prologe and here bigynneth the book of Numeri[a].
